House Bill 1051
Economic Matters

(Delegate Valderrama, et al.)

Labor and Employment - Equal Pay for Equal Work

---

This bill expands the Equal Pay for Equal Work law to prohibit wage discrimination based on gender identity, among other provisions relating to the Equal Pay for Equal Work law. Additionally, an employer may not provide less favorable employment opportunities based on sex or gender identity. Moreover, an employer may not prohibit an employee from inquiring about, discussing, or disclosing the wages of the employee or another employee or requesting that the employer provide a reason for why the employee's wages are a condition of employment.

The bill applies only prospectively and may not be interpreted to apply or have any effect on or application to any cause of action arising before the bill's October 1, 2015 effective date.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: The Department of Labor, Licensing, and Regulation (DLLR) and the Maryland Commission on Civil Rights (MCCR) can handle the bill's requirements with existing resources. Any increase in caseloads for the Office of the Attorney General and the District Court is not expected to affect State expenditures. Potential minimal increase in general fund revenues due to imposition of existing penalty provisions.

Local Effect: The bill does not materially affect local governmental operations or finances because relatively few cases should be heard in the circuit courts, local governments currently cannot discriminate against an individual based on gender identity, and salaries of local governmental employees are public information.

Small Business Effect: Potential meaningful.

Analysis

Bill Summary: The bill expands the Equal Pay for Equal Work law to prohibit an employer from discriminating between employees in any occupation by (1) paying a wage to employees of one gender identity at a rate less than the rate paid to other employees under specified conditions and (2) providing less favorable employment opportunities, as defined by the bill, based on sex or gender identity. The bill establishes that, for the Equal Pay for Equal Work law, an employee is considered working at the same establishment as another employee if the employees work for the same employer at workplaces located within a 75-mile radius of each other. The bill does not prohibit a variation in a wage based on specified systems or factors unless an employee demonstrates the employer uses a particular employment practice that causes a disparate impact on the basis of gender and the employer refuses to adopt an existing alternative practice that does not produce the disparate impact.

An employer may not prohibit an employee from inquiring about, discussing, or disclosing the wages of the employee or another employee or requesting that the employer provide a reason for why the employee's wages are a condition of employment. An employer may not require an employee to sign a waiver or any other document to deny the employee the right to disclose or discuss the employee's wages. An employer may not take any adverse employment actions against an employee for specified actions regarding wages or exercising specified rights.

An employer may, in a written policy provided to each employee, establish reasonable workday limitations on the time, place, and manner for inquiries relating to employee wages so long as it is consistent with standards adopted by the Commissioner of Labor and Industry and all other State and federal laws. If an employee does not adhere to these limitations, an employer may take adverse employment action. A limitation may include prohibiting an employee from discussing or disclosing another employee's wages without that employee's prior permission, except in specified instances for an employee who has access to other employees' wage information as a part of the employee's essential job functions.

The bill does not (1) require an employee to disclose the employee's wages; (2) diminish employee rights to negotiate the terms and conditions of employment or otherwise limit employee rights; (3) create an obligation on an employer or employee to disclose wages; (4) permit an employee, without an employer's written consent, to disclose proprietary information, trade secret information, or information that is a legal privilege or protected by law; or (5) permit an employee to disclose wage information to an employer's competitor.

The Commissioner of Labor and Industry, in consultation with MCCR, must develop educational materials and make training available to assist employers in adopting training, policies, and procedures that comply with the bill's requirements.

If an employer violates Equal Pay for Equal Work provisions, an affected employee may bring an action against the employer to recover the difference between the wages paid to male and female employees who do work of comparable nature or the same type work and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages.

If an employer violates specified wage disclosure provisions, an affected employee may bring an action against the employer for injunctive relief and to recover both actual and liquidated damages. Liquidated damages of up to three times the total amount of the wages found to be due may be awarded under specified willful violations.

If a court determines that an employee is entitled to judgment in an action, the court must allow against the employer reasonable counsel fees and other costs of the action, as well as prejudgment interest in accordance with the Maryland Rules.

Current Law: State law generally prohibits an employer with at least 15 employees from discharging, failing or refusing to hire, or otherwise discriminating against any individual with respect to the individual's compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because of race, color, religion, sex, age, national origin, marital status, sexual orientation, gender identity, genetic information, or disability. The State and local governments are considered employers.

Regardless of employer size, under the State's Equal Pay for Equal Work law, an employer may not discriminate between employees in any occupation by paying a wage to employees of one sex at a rate less than the rate paid to employees of the opposite sex if both employees work in the same establishment and perform work of comparable character or work on the same operation, in the same business, or of the same type. Discrimination on the basis of gender identity is not addressed explicitly in the Equal Pay for Equal Work law. An employee may bring an action against an employer that violates this law.

When the Commissioner of Labor and Industry has determined that the State's Equal Pay for Equal Work law has been violated, the commissioner must (1) try to resolve any issue informally by mediation or (2) ask the Attorney General to bring an action on behalf of the employee. The Attorney General may bring an action in the county where the violation allegedly occurred for injunctive relief, damages, or other relief.

If an employer violates the State's Equal Pay for Equal Work law, an affected employee may bring an action against the employer for injunctive relief and liquidated damages. An employee may bring an action on behalf of the employee and other employees similarly affected. An action must be filed within three years after the occurrence of the act on which the action is based.

Upon written request of an employee, the Commissioner of Labor and Industry may take an assignment of the claim in trust for the employee, ask the Attorney General to bring an action on behalf of the employee, and consolidate two or more claims against an employer.

If a court determines that an employee is entitled to judgment in an action, the court must allow against the employer reasonable counsel fees and other costs of the action.

An employer who violates certain provisions of the Equal Pay Equal Work law is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of up to $300.

Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission

The federal Equal Pay Act of 1963 requires that men and women be given equal pay for equal work in the same establishment. The jobs need not be identical, but they must be substantially equal.

The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) is responsible for enforcing federal laws that make it illegal to discriminate against a job applicant or an employee because of the person's race, color, religion, sex (including pregnancy), national origin, age (40 or older), disability, or genetic information. It is also illegal to discriminate against a person because the person complained about discrimination, filed a charge of discrimination, or participated in an employment discrimination investigation or lawsuit. Most employers with at least 15 employees are covered by EEOC laws (20 employees in age discrimination cases). Most labor unions and employment agencies are also covered.

Antidiscrimination laws apply to all types of work situations, including hiring, firing, promotions, harassment, training, wages, and benefits. EEOC has the authority to investigate charges of discrimination against employers who are covered by the law. If EEOC finds that discrimination has occurred, it tries to settle the charge. If not successful, EEOC has the authority to file a lawsuit to protect the rights of individuals and the interests of the public but does not, however, file lawsuits in all cases in which there was a finding of discrimination.

State Expenditures: Expanding the Equal Pay for Equal Work law to prohibit wage discrimination based on gender identity has no effect on the State as an employer because State agencies already are prohibited from discriminating against individuals based on gender identity.

The Maryland Public Information Act gives the public the right to access government records, including salaries of governmental employees, without unnecessary cost and delay. Thus, the wage disclosure provisions of the bill do not have a material effect on the State because State employees' salaries are already public information.

The Division of Labor and Industry (DLI) within DLLR reports that it has not received a complaint regarding the Equal Pay for Equal Work law in over five years. Based on that, DLI anticipates receiving only a nominal number of complaints and inquiries, which can be addressed using existing resources. DLI, in consultation with MCCR, must develop training materials, which can be done with existing resources. To the extent that employees discover wage discrimination as a result of the bill, MCCR can handle an increase in discrimination cases with existing resources.

Small Business Effect: Employers with fewer than 15 employees may no longer discriminate against an individual based on gender identity. Additionally, employers with fewer than 15 employees may not provide less favorable employment opportunities based on sex or gender identity.

While the bill prohibits an employer from taking any adverse employment action against an employee for specified actions relating to inquiring, disclosing, or discussing wages, the bill does not create an obligation on an employer or employee to disclose wages. However, to the extent that employees gather more information on wages, the bill may create pressure on an employer to decrease or eliminate wage disparities.
