Analysis

Bill Summary: "Teletherapy" means telemedicine, as defined in § 15-139 of the Insurance Article, used to deliver behavioral health services.

To use teletherapy, a health care practitioner must (1) establish a patient-practitioner relationship with the patient for whom teletherapy is being used; (2) provide for the privacy of communications made through teletherapy; and (3) address, to the extent practicable, the need to maintain the safety and well-being of patients for whom teletherapy is being used.

Current Law: Section 15-139 of the Insurance Article defines “telemedicine” – as it relates to the delivery of health care services – as the use of interactive audio, video, or other telecommunications or electronic technology by a licensed health care provider to deliver a health care service within the scope of practice of the health care provider at a site other than the site at which the patient is located. “Telemedicine” does not include an audio-only telephone conversation, an email message, or a fax transmission between a health care provider and a patient.

Chapters 579 and 580 of 2012 require insurers, nonprofit health service plans, and health maintenance organizations to cover and reimburse for health care services appropriately delivered through telemedicine. Telemental health services are provided under the Maryland Medicaid program and the public mental health system. Several private providers also offer mental health services via telemedicine.

Background: The use of telecommunications technologies in the provision of mental health therapy has increased in recent years due to ongoing development of new technologies and the expansion of payment for telemedicine services. Industry associations, such as the American Psychological Association and the American Telemedicine Association, have developed guidelines for the provision of such services. These guidelines address such issues as the competence of practitioners, patient safety, standards of care, informed consent, confidentiality/security/disposal of data and information, testing and assessment, and interjurisdictional practice.
