11. Description and Purpose of Project (Limit length to visible area)

The Josiah Henson Park is a National Register historic resource of local, state, national, and international significance because of its association with Reverend Josiah Henson, whose 1849 autobiography describes the strength and resilience he used to overcome slavery. Hensons memoir inspired Harriet Beecher Stowes landmark novel, Uncle Toms Cabin, which fueled the abolitionist movement. The Riley/Bolten House and grounds in Rockville, MD, known today as Josiah Henson Park, is where Henson was enslaved for nearly 30 years. It is now part of the NPS National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom Program. The project will build a museum and modern visitors center to tell the story of Hensons ability to overcome slavery, using his own words and artifacts from archeology at the site. In addition to permanent exhibits, a film and audio-visual display, there will be a research library on Henson and slavery in Maryland.

Josiah Henson Park is the former plantation property of Isaac Riley where Reverend Josiah Henson was enslaved from 1795-1830. It is also a historic resource of local, state, national and even international significance because of its association with Reverend Josiah Henson, whose 1849 autobiography, as narrated by himself, describes his extraordinary experience overcoming slavery. This memoir inspired Harriet Beecher Stowe's landmark novel, Uncle Tom's Cabin. Ongoing archaeological excavations seek to find out where Josiah Henson and other enslaved persons may have lived on the site, as well as how the plantation functioned. The house in the park that stands belonged to the slave-owning family, and dates from 1800-1815. Josiah Henson Park is currently under construction to transform into a public museum with visitor center and destination for education - a place where all Maryland school children can learn about the resilience and strength of those who overcame slavery. The new public museum will celebrate the courageous and remarkable story of Josiah Henson's life. The primary project work will construct a new visitor orientation building, a bus-drop off area and small parking lot, convert the existing historic house to a museum, and rehabilitate associated landscape sitework that will make the park more accessible for visitors. The narrative of Henson's life will unfold in an orchestrated manner through way-finding exhibits, an introductory film and exhibit inside the new building, outdoor museum exhibits, and primary exhibits in the rehabilitated historic house and living-history in the log kitchen. The goal for the interpretation of Josiah Henson Park is to accurately portray Henson's life and bring his story to the foreground of American history. It also will explore the impact of Stowe's novel and preserve the African American Experience. The impact of Stowe's novel should not be underestimated. Published in 1852, it broke all sales records of the time and sold over half a million copies by 1857. It has inspired debates and greatly influenced politics, race relations, and myths and stereotypes throughout history. The realization of this project will have a permanent educational and societal benefit through cultural conservation. This project will preserve and share the complete story of the remarkable and influential Reverend Henson, the often-forgotten real man behind Stowe's fiction. Currently, Montgomery Parks makes limited use of Josiah Henson Park, offering only school-based learning opportunities and field trips, targeting students in grades 4 and up. In addition, the site is opened to the public a few times each year for special events, bringing the total usage of the site to less than approximately 2,000 visitors annually. The story can only be told, and the site can only accommodate visitors with a docent-led tour. With the help of this requested funding, the complete museum with interpretive exhibits will allow the transformed site to bring up to 70,000 visitors annually, approximately. The exhibits will be designed to expose visitors to Henson's experiences and create lasting impressions through the challenges and inspiration of his story and the application of the lessons learned to that of today's America. The intended outcome of the museum is to leave visitors with an awareness of their country's history, culture, and identity, and the ability to participate in discussion and reflection of race relations in America today. The Josiah Henson Park Museum and Education Center is an essential investment in preserving, interpreting, and creating more effective access to this unique historic site. More funding is needed for the historic sites full restoration, for enhanced exhibits, and for amenities in the landscape for field trips and groups, such as an amphitheater, picnic pavilion, archaeology station and possible reconstructed outbuildings.
