BILL NO: Senate Bill 680 (Family Law – Minors – Emancipation)
HEARING: Senate JPR, February 20, 2020
POSITION: SUPPORT WITH AMENDMENTS

The Tahirih Justice Center (Tahirih) is a non-profit legal advocacy organization that, since 1997, has served survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, human trafficking, and other abuse. Through a specialized Forced Marriage Initiative launched in 2011, Tahirih has unique legal and policy expertise in forced and child marriage in the U.S.ⁱ

Tahirih strongly supports Senate Bill 680 in its creation of a clear, thoughtful and detailed framework to enable a mature and self-sufficient minor to petition a court for an order of emancipation. Emancipation can be a critical tool to empower minors to advocate for themselves, including to escape parental abuse, neglect, exploitation, or coercion.

Thirty states already have standalone emancipation statutes, and most, as SB 680 does, set age 16 as the threshold for eligibility. SB 860 also draws on other best practices and lessons learned across these states and builds on a model statute promulgated by the American Bar Association.ⁱⁱ It includes vital safeguards like the appointment of an attorney to advise and advocate for the minor, guidance for the court on what a robust inquiry into the minor's best interests must entail, and a specific enumeration of the legal rights and responsibilities that emancipation will confer on the minor.ⁱⁱⁱ

However, Tahirih is very concerned that, as-introduced, SB 680 does not go far enough to protect vulnerable minors from harm. The bill would make emancipation an additional, alternative route for minors age 16 or 17 to be permitted to marry, leaving in place lax exceptions in current law to a minimum marriage age of 18 that are based on pregnancy and/or parental consent.

As a result, most minors who marry will continue to be un-emancipated. This is disturbing because attaining majority naturally at age 18, or being clearly emancipated by a court order, can make a pivotal difference to the rights and options a married minor has available to her in case of domestic violence or divorce.

Un-emancipated minors who run away from home can be taken into custody without a warrant; shelters may have to request a parent's consent within 24 hours of a minor's arrival or petition for legal custody of the minor themselves; relatives or friends who might offer a runaway a place to stay could risk being sued by the parents for interfering with parental rights or charged by police for harboring a runaway; un-emancipated minors cannot enter binding legal contracts, and as a result, adults (from lawyers to landlords) tend to avoid entering contracts with minors; and under current law, the marriage of a minor relieves the minor's parents of support obligations, but it does not clearly grant the minor herself any rights. As a result, a court may question whether she can even file a petition for a protective order or divorce on her own.^{iv}

Tahirih urges this Committee to embrace a simple but powerful proposition: that no one who is legally and practically still a child should be permitted to marry.

Child marriage is a serious problem in Maryland. Nearly 3,500 minors were married in Maryland from 2000-2018, most of them girls married to adult men, many of whom were significantly older.^v In 2018, for example, a 15 year old was brought from Delaware to Maryland to be married to a 22 year old under Maryland's pregnancy exception – yet in both states, sex between individuals at those ages is a crime punishable by substantial jail time.

The marriage-age exceptions in current law have enabled cover-ups for sexual assault and work-arounds for predators, facilitated forced marriages of girls against their will, trapped vulnerable girls in violent homes without the rights or resources to find safety, and failed to protect girls from other serious risks and harms of early marriage. Research shows that marriage before age 18 stacks steep odds against a young person's security and wellbeing, including higher drop-out rates from high school and college, a greater likelihood of poverty, more medical and mental health problems, and divorce rates of up to 80%.^{vi}

Since 2016, a total of 21 states have taken steps to end or limit child marriage, and 8 states now condition eligibility to marry on a minor's having been emancipated (either naturally at age 18, or after petitioning a court). Six of those eight are Maryland's regional neighbors (Delaware, Kentucky, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Virginia). More states around the country are raising their minimum marriage ages, limiting age differences, and instituting other safeguards to better protect vulnerable minors. Maryland is in a fast-diminishing minority of states that have such a low age floor (age 15) for marriage, and that retain a pregnancy exception; most states have eliminated pregnancy exceptions they once had and several expressly instruct judges that a pregnancy does not prove that marriage is in a minor's best interest. As more states strengthen their laws, those seeking to abuse and exploit girls under the guise of marriage will increasingly gravitate to Maryland for its weaker laws.

Tahirih therefore urges further amendments to SB 680 in order to:

- clarify that only court-emancipated minors may marry, eliminating all other exceptions in Md. Family Code §2-301 to a minimum marriage age of 18;
- restrict the age of an intended spouse to no more than 4 years older than a minor; and
- put in place a two-week waiting period between the emancipation order and the marriage license.^{vii}

Limited exceptions to a minimum marriage age of 18 only for court-emancipated minors can have a significant impact; in Virginia and Texas, for example, this shift resulted in about a 90% decrease in the numbers of minors married pre- and post-reforms.^{viii}

Tahirih strongly believes that the best way to protect girls from forced marriages and other risks of marrying young is to set the legal marriage age at 18, without exception. However, we believe that SB 680 – as amended to include marriage-age reforms to Md. Family Code §2-301– will help accomplish these objectives. The bill would then increase the likelihood that if a minor marries, she is making that decision for herself, and that if she faces abuse, she will be able to leave the marriage and rebuild her life in safety.

The Tahirih Justice Center respectfully urges a favorable report on SB 680, with amendments as outlined.

ⁱⁱⁱ SB 680 also gives minors the right to petition on their own, recognizing that some minors may seek to emancipate precisely because they have abusive parents who could otherwise block their access to emancipation. Similarly, appointing an attorney for the minor not only acknowledges that emancipation involves serious legal consequences, but also accounts for the possibility that some parents may try to foist emancipation on a minor, just to terminate their obligations to support and care for their child.

Ensuring that a minor is represented by an attorney in the emancipation proceeding could make a pivotal difference to a vulnerable young person, and notably, would mean de minimis cost to the state. It is reasonable to expect that Maryland might see only a few dozen emancipation petitions filed each year. Data obtained by the Tahirih Justice Center from the Virginia courts shows that fewer than 75 emancipation petitions were filed a year on average over the years 2010-2016. Similar data obtained from the North Carolina courts shows about 100 emancipation petitions a year on average over a recent 5-year period, and in Georgia, fewer than 20 emancipation petitions were filed state-wide in any recent year. All 3 states have significantly larger populations than Maryland, so again, Maryland will likely see relatively few emancipation petitions a year.

Commercial Law Code Ann. § 1-103 (c)(1) (“The age of majority as it pertains to the capacity to contract is 18 years of age”); Md. Code, General Provisions §1-401 (defining age 18 as the age of majority, and at subpart “b,” relieving parents of support obligations upon the marriage of a child).

^{vii} Mandatory waiting periods can provide critical time and opportunity for a newly-emancipated minor to get help to avoid or prevent a forced marriage that she may be facing, rather than find herself rushed from the judge’s courtroom straight to the clerk’s window to be married same-day. Several states prudently place limitations on an emancipated minor’s ability to marry, recognizing profound power imbalances between an adult and minor spouse, especially the younger the minor and/or greater the age differences. For example, Kentucky, Ohio and Georgia all require the emancipated minor to be at least age 17 to marry, the intended spouse to be no more than 4 years older, and have a waiting period between an order of emancipation and the issuance of a marriage license. Kentucky, Georgia, and Virginia also vet the criminal background of a minor’s intended spouse and examine any history of protective orders between the parties.

Child Marriage Laws in Maryland and the Region

Age “floor” is given for each state in parentheses. The floor is the age below which no child can be married, regardless of parental consent or judicial approval.

In addition to an age floor, New York, Ohio, Kentucky and Virginia also have several additional safeguards, including a requirement that a minor be court-emancipated (given the rights of a legal adult) before marriage.

FAST FACTS:

- Maryland’s current laws on minimum marriage age are weaker than 7 of the other 9 states plus DC in this region. And a bill with dozens of bipartisan co-sponsors that would set the age at 18, no exceptions, is expected to become law soon in Pennsylvania.
- Six states and DC set a higher age floor than Maryland and/or require that individuals must be legal adults before marrying.
- Maryland is the only state in the region that still has a pregnancy exception, and is only one of 6 such states nationwide. Most states now recognize that a pregnant underage girl may need a protection order, not a marriage license.

Measurable Outcomes in States Leading the Movement to End Child Marriage

Virginia was the first state to limit marriage to legal adults, with a 2016 law that set a minimum marriage age of 18 with an exception for court-emancipated minors.

The year before Virginia's new law went into effect, 182 children married in the state. The year after, that number fell to just 13 – over a 90% decline.

Most married a spouse within 4-6 years of their age (compared with decades of age difference in some cases before the new law).

Texas also set a minimum marriage age of 18, with an exception for court-emancipated minors with a new law that went into effect in September 2017.

Preliminary data shows a decline in children marrying of about 90% following the law's effective date.

From September 2016 to February 2017, 175 children married in Texas. Over the same six-month period immediately following the law's effective date, that number fell to just 18.

Those same comparison periods also saw a decline in age differences in marriages involving a spouse under age 18, with the maximum age gap falling from 14 years to 7 years.

A total of 21 states have enacted some reforms to limit child marriage. In addition to Virginia and Texas, six more have limited marriage to legal adults since 2016: Delaware and New Jersey (age 18, no exceptions); New York, Kentucky, Ohio and Georgia (age 18, or age 17 and emancipated).

In states that set the bar for marriage at legal adulthood, we can see the greatest impact on the child marriage problem.

In states that adopted some reforms but did not set the bar for marriage at legal adulthood – for example, Florida, which simply raised the age floor to 17 and limited age differences – measurable outcomes are far lower.

The National Movement to End Child Marriage

To Ensure Full and Free Consent to Marriage, and To Protect Children from Irreparable Harm

What are states doing to address child marriage?

Prior to 2015, the public and policymakers had no idea what the nature and scope of America's child marriage problem really was. At that time, investigative reporters and advocates serving child marriage survivors began to pull and analyze state marriage license records, leading to the startling realization that over 200,000 minors (children under age 18) were married from 2000-2015 alone.¹

The overwhelming majority were girls, most married adult men, and many times, those men were significantly older. Increasing media coverage over the last few years has called attention to the horrific experiences of many former "child brides" who were abused and exploited under the guise of marriage.²

In response, twenty-one U.S. states have strengthened their minimum marriage age laws since 2016, and there has been significant growth, year over year, in the number of states taking up reforms.

Eight of those states have effectively ended child marriage – either by setting the minimum marriage age at 18 without exception, or by prohibiting marriage licenses from being issued to minors unless they have been court-emancipated³.

New laws were enacted in Delaware and New Jersey which entirely ban marriage under age 18⁴:

State	Marriage-Age Requirements Before Reform	Marriage-Age Requirements After Reform	Effective:
Delaware	No age floor; judicial approval required for all minors, based on several criteria	Minimum marriage age set ⁵ at 18, no exceptions	2018
New Jersey	No age floor; for age 16-17, only parental consent required; under age 16, judicial approval required, with little to no guidance for judges' decisions	Minimum marriage age set at 18, no exceptions	2018

Other states that have recently enacted new marriage-age laws are:

State	Marriage-Age Requirements After Reform	Effective:
Virginia	Minor must be court-emancipated (eligible at age 16); attorney appointed to minor; if emancipating to marry, several criteria apply (e.g., judge must find minor is not being coerced and examine criminal record/protective order history of intended spouse); "best interests" inquiry	2016

Now She's Fighting to End Child Marriage in America," CNN (January 30, 2018); "Grown Men Are Exploiting Loopholes in State Laws to Marry Children," Huffington Post (August 30, 2017).

⁴ As of January 2020, bills are pending in several additional states that would entirely ban marriage under age 18.

⁵ As used in these charts, "set" refers to states that previously had no age floor (no lower limit to how young a child could be married, if the statutory criteria for an exception were met), and that through legislative reforms, instituted a firm age floor for the first time. "Raised" refers to states that previously had a lower age floor, and that through legislative reforms, instituted a new, higher age floor.

Connecticut	Age floor set at 16; age 16-17 now requires judicial approval; judge must consider factors including whether there is coercion	2017

California	No age floor; exception based on judicial approval; reforms improved judicial approval process, including by requiring private interviews with both a Family Court Services officer and the judge	2019

Child Marriage Poses Serious Risks to Children

PHYSICAL IMPACT

- Women who marry before age 19 have a 23% greater risk of developing a serious health condition including diabetes, cancer, heart attack, or stroke.¹
- Teen girls who marry tend to have more children, earlier, and more closely spaced.² They are:
 - » Much more (130%) likely to get pregnant than unmarried teens who live with a partner³
 - » More likely to have their first child before age 18⁴
 - » 40% more likely to have a second birth within 24 months of their first⁵
 - » Nearly 3x more likely to have at least 5 children⁶
- Young women and girls aged 16-19 face intimate partner violence victimization rates almost 3x the national average.⁷
- Overall, women who marry as children are more likely to seek and access health services, compared to women who married in adulthood.⁸

ECONOMIC IMPACT

- Child brides tend to come from poverty and remain in poverty.⁹
 - » Girls who marry underage are up to 31 percentage points more likely to live in future poverty.¹⁰
 - » For teen mothers, getting married and later divorcing can more than double the likelihood of poverty.¹¹
- Earning potential and work opportunities are limited by interrupted education and low education levels. Girls who marry under age 19 are:
 - » 50% more likely to drop out of high school
 - » 4x less likely to graduate college¹²

SOCIAL IMPACT

- Child brides tend to be isolated from support networks including school, friends, and family.
- The majority (70-80%) of marriages entered into when at least one person is under age 18 ultimately end in divorce.¹³
 - » According to one study based on census data, 23% of children who marry are already separated or divorced by the time they turn 18¹⁴
- These negative outcomes, combined with the economic impacts of child marriage which limit a woman's ability to become financially independent, increase vulnerability to multiple victimization and often result in consequences becoming cyclical and intergenerational.

MENTAL IMPACT

- Women who marry before age 18 are more likely to report stressful life events.
- Women who marry before age 18 are also present with significantly more psychiatric disorders, including:
 - » mood and anxiety disorders including major depressive disorder
 - » antisocial personality disorder (prevalence nearly 3x higher)¹⁵
- Social isolation and feeling a lack of control over their lives can contribute to a "child bride's" poor mental health. In fact, agencies working with girls facing or trying to escape forced marriages report that nearly all have contemplated or attempted suicide.¹⁶
