

Homeschooling is thriving and producing great results for students. A homeschool advisory council is unnecessary and will limit freedoms of families to do what is best for their children. Since families do not financially benefit from the government, it doesn't make sense for the government funds to regulate what is already working. Any regulation also requires maintenance and upkeep, which saps resources that can be used elsewhere.

Robert Spangler