

C. Matthew Hill
Attorney
Public Justice Center
201 North Charles Street, Suite 1200
Baltimore, Maryland 21201
410-625-9409, ext. 229
hillm@publicjustice.org

HB 36 - Real Property – Actions to Repossess – Proof of Rental Licensure

Hearing before the House Judiciary Committee on January 19, 2023

Position: SUPPORT (FAV)

Public Justice Center (PJC) is a nonprofit public interest law firm that assists over 800 renters each year. We stand with tenants to protect and expand their rights to safe, habitable, affordable, and non-discriminatory housing. PJC seeks a favorable report on HB 36. HB 36 is identical to SB 563, which passed the House (90-45) and Senate (47-0) in 2022 but was vetoed by Gov. Hogan. In jurisdictions that have a landlord licensing law, HB 36 would stop landlords who do not have an operating license from using streamlined court processes (Failure To Pay Rent, Tenant Holding Over, and Breach of Lease) to evict tenants. Licensing laws protect public health and safety through periodic inspections. Like any other business, if a landlord wants to file suit in Maryland courts, they must be licensed in any jurisdiction that requires licensure.

Licensing laws in six (6) counties and other municipalities require landlords to pass a periodic a health and safety inspection. The vast majority of landlords comply with these laws. However, we have witnessed many clients or constituents whose predatory landlords refuse to make repairs, refuse to obtain a license, extract as much rent as possible, and when the tenant complains, move to evict them through one of Maryland’s streamlined eviction processes. When unlicensed landlords successfully use eviction court, it encourages all landlords to ignore licensing laws and increases the risk of tenants being subjected to health and safety hazards.

While current law stops illegally operating landlords from obtaining a judgment for eviction for failure to pay rent, the Court created a loophole in Velicky v. CopyCat by allowing illegally operating landlords to obtain an eviction in Tenant Holding Over cases. 476 Md. 435 (2021). On Jan. 17, 2023, The Baltimore Banner reported in the attached article that “Tenant Holding Over filings are now about three times higher than they were before the pandemic.” Under current law, landlords in these cases may ignore basic health and safety laws and still use the taxpayer-funded court system to evict tenants.

Judge Shirley Watts understood this dynamic, and wrote in dissent in Velicky: “Allowing [the landlord] to evict [tenants] in a tenant holding over action under RP § 8-402 without a license essentially renders the licensing requirement of Baltimore City Code ... meaningless and defeats its purpose of ensuring that rental properties are fit to live in. As a result of the majority opinion, Copycat and other landlords will have very little incentive to get licenses, which would require bringing rental properties up to code.”

Renters United Maryland made significant compromises in 2022 and had reached agreement with Maryland Multi-Housing Association on the amended bill, which is being reintroduced as it passed the House and Senate in 2022. These compromises include:

- Strike the requirement that the landlord show a license when filing a complaint;
- Allow unlicensed landlords to proceed to a Tenant Holding Over or Breach of Lease trial if they show that the tenant’s act caused the landlord not to have a rental license; and
- Allow landlords to submit an electronic record or provisional license.

Additionally HB 36 does not require proof of licensure if the landlord is proceeding on a breach of lease case alleging that the tenant’s behavior constitutes an imminent threat of danger to person or property.

Some landlords still oppose the bill claiming that one obstructive tenant can hold up licensing for an entire building and prevent other evictions. This is a red herring.

- No large landlord has testified to specific examples of whether they acted diligently to make repairs and obtain a license but were denied because of the actions of one tenant who they could not evict.
- Landlords have many tools to evict any tenant who would hold up repairs including lease provisions permitting them to enter the unit to address the issue when the tenant is not present, or to enter even if the tenant objects when they have to address emergencies or if the tenant is causing the code violation.
- Code enforcement has the right to enter the unit even when the occupant objects either for emergency issues or upon issuance of a warrant that they can obtain.

Public Justice Center is a member of the Renters United Maryland, a statewide coalition of renters, organizers, and advocates, and we urge the Committee’s report of Favorable on HB 36.

Community issues > Housing

Eviction numbers are climbing back toward pre-pandemic highs in parts of Maryland

By Ryan Little and Sophie Kasakove

Published on: January 17, 2023 6:00 AM EST | Updated on: January 17, 2023 9:48 AM EST

Tenants, advocates and lawmakers gathered outside the Maryland State House on Thursday Jan. 12, 2023 to call on lawmakers to pass several policies that would protect tenants from eviction or poor living conditions (Callan Tansill-Suddath)

Our nonprofit news organization is made possible by subscribers and donors who value storytelling that impacts and uplifts communities. Thank you for supporting our journalism.

After falling to an unprecedented low during the pandemic, eviction numbers are creeping back toward 2019 rates in Maryland, according to data from the Maryland Judiciary and the Baltimore City Sheriff's Office.

Over the course of nearly three years, thousands of evictions were prevented across Maryland by a combination of federal and local eviction moratoriums put in place during the pandemic, federal rental assistance funds, and court backlogs.

With eviction bans having long expired, rental assistance running low, courts back up and running at full speed, and rents sky-high, 2022 saw a rapid uptick in evictions statewide — especially in the summer.

Between August and September 2022, 13 jurisdictions, including Baltimore, recorded an eviction tally in at least one month that exceeded the number of evictions for that month in 2019, the last year before the COVID-19 pandemic was declared.

Maryland evictions drastically increased during the summer months, moving closer to pre-pandemic levels

Evictions in the third quarter of 2022 were about 30% lower than during the same period in 2019, but about two and three times higher than during the third quarter in 2021 and 2020, respectively.

Chart: Ryan Little - Source: Maryland Judiciary Case Activity Reports THE BALTIMORE BANNER

There remain minimal guardrails to protect against a continued return to a pre-pandemic “normal” that advocates, officials and tenants across the state have long argued shouldn’t be treated as normal at all. In the last six months of 2019, 10,486 people were evicted in Maryland, including 2,920 in Baltimore City.

The latest numbers “just confirm what we’ve been seeing on the ground,” said Matt Hill, an attorney with the Public Justice Center who represents tenants facing eviction. “Courts are packed and people are desperate to hold onto their homes and experiencing continuing instability in the economy from the pandemic and skyrocketing rent increases.”

In the city of Baltimore, evictions this past September and November surpassed the 2019 tallies in those months, according to data provided by the Baltimore City Sheriff’s Office. The number was far lower in December 2022 because many evictions were postponed that month as sheriff’s deputies were retrained on new eviction policies implemented by newly installed Baltimore Sheriff Sam Cogen. The Democrat ran on a platform to “humanize” the city’s eviction process by providing tenants with adequate notice of court and removal dates and confirming that a building was licensed as a rental property before enforcing an eviction there, among other changes.

Aaron Greenfield, director of government affairs for the Maryland Multi-Housing Association, argued that evictions remained significantly below 2019 numbers for much of 2022.

“We’ll judge the data objectively, but I’m not sure that there’s a story here that evictions are increasing. In fact, the data suggests just the opposite,” said Greenfield. “Should there be an increase in evictions, then I think we all need to sit down and figure that out, but that’s not what the data suggests to me.”

Eviction numbers overall statewide still lag behind 2019 numbers, but quarterly counts have tripled since 2020: 4,107 people were evicted during the summer of 2022, 30% less than for that period in 2019, but about three times more than in the same three-month period in 2020 and about double the amount of summer 2021.

“We are starting to get concerned that while the case filings remain low, the number of evictions is approaching pre-pandemic levels,” Reena Shah, executive director for Maryland Access to Justice Commission, wrote in an email. “That trend is likely to continue, especially as we anticipate that all rental assistance funding will be depleted in a couple of months and people’s ability to access rental assistance to pay the rent and keep themselves housed will be threatened.”

Sign Up for Alerts

Get notified of need-to-know info from The Banner

Sign up now >

Evictions have increased rapidly in Baltimore City, where rates once closely mirrored Baltimore County’s. In August and September, about eight people were evicted each month for every 10,000 residents. The statewide rate was a little more than two people, and Baltimore County’s was around four.

Once closely mirroring per-person rates in Baltimore County, Baltimore City evictions have incr

More than twice the rate of people were forcibly removed in the city compared to the county in August and September 2022. About 8 people were compared to 4 in Baltimore and 3 statewide.

Forcible removals are visualized per 10,000 residents.

Chart: Ryan Little • Source: Maryland Judiciary Case Activity Reports

Housing groups call on legislators to protect tenants

As state legislators enter the second week of the Maryland General Assembly session, housing groups are calling on them to put in place measures to keep those numbers from rising even higher.

Outside the State House on Thursday, tenants and advocates gathered to call on lawmakers to vote in favor of a handful of bills that would protect renters from eviction. One bill to be introduced would enable localities to pass laws requiring landlords to have just cause not to renew a lease. Another would stop landlords who don't have an operating license from evicting tenants in jurisdictions that have a licensing law.

And the group called on Gov.-elect Wes Moore to invest $175 million in the fiscal year 2024 budget to sustain emergency rental assistance as federal funds run out. In December, a coalition of dozens of advocacy groups and local officials — including Baltimore Mayor Brandon Scott, and the county executives of Anne Arundel, Howard, Montgomery and Baltimore counties — made the request in a letter to outgoing Gov. Larry Hogan. As emergency rental assistance funds have dried up in recent months, many jurisdictions across the state have paused intake or limited assistance only to tenants facing imminent eviction.

The most recent eviction numbers show that while they've increased, filings remain below pre-pandemic rates, reflecting both the availability of rental assistance and a reform adopted statewide in 2021 that requires landlords to provide tenants with 10 days' notice before they file for an eviction with the courts.

Failure to Pay Rent filings are still about half of their pre-pandemic highs

The decreased filings likely reflect the availability of rental assistance and a 2021 law that forced landlords to provide tenants 10 days notice before

Failure to Pay Rent filings are visualized per 10,000 residents.

Chart: Ryan Little • Source: Maryland Judiciary Case Activity Reports

Filings were higher throughout 2022 for tenant-holding-over cases — which a landlord can file when a tenant stays in their unit beyond the terms of their lease — than in 2019.

The filing rate for these cases has steadily increased since 2020, when failure-to-pay rent cases were restricted by federal and state eviction moratoriums. By the time the courts began processing failure-to-pay cases again, some landlords realized that pursuing a tenant-holding-over case was a quicker legal process. In September, there were 786 of these cases filed in Baltimore city.

Tenant Holding Over filings are now about three times higher than they were before the pandemic

When courts began processing failure-to-pay cases again, some landlords realized that pursuing a tenant-holding-over case — which a landlord can file when a tenant stays in their unit beyond the terms of their lease — was a quicker legal process.

Tenant Holding Over filings are visualized per 10,000 residents.

Chart: Ryan Little - Source: Maryland Judiciary Case Activity Reports

Advocates are hopeful that a statewide “access to counsel” provision will help more renters gain legal representation to fight evictions. While the law passed and took effect in 2021, funding was not released until this past summer.

General Assembly reporter Callan Tansill-Suddath contributed reporting to this article.

ryan.little@thebaltimorebanner.com

sophie.kasakove@thebaltimorebanner.com

More from The Banner

Despite historic investment in rental assistance, Baltimore-area renters still falling through the cracks

What you get for $329K-$419K in Baltimore

Can this developer bring crowds back to Inner Harbor?

Newsletters

Support Us

Podcast

Alerts

Events Calendar

Inauguration

Games

Olszewski proposes $16M affordable housing trust fund to acquire, convey derelict land

Company

- About Us
- Newsroom Policies & Code of Ethics
- Culture & Careers
- Our Impact
- Creatives in Residence
- Community Engagement
- Support Us
- Subscribe

Terms & Services

- Privacy Policy
- Terms of Service
- Terms of Sale
- Cookie Policy
- RSS Terms of Service
- Submissions & Discussion Policy
- Ad Choices

Contact Us

- Customer Care
- Contact the Newsroom & Tips
- Advertise with Us
- Group & Enterprise Sales

www.thebaltimorebanner.com © 2022 The Baltimore Banner. All Rights Reserved. Use of this site constitutes acceptance of our Terms of Service and Privacy Policies | CA Notice at Collection and Privacy Notice | Do Not Sell My Personal Information | Ad Choices

The Baltimore Banner may receive compensation for some links to products and services on this website. Offers may be subject to change without notice.

The Baltimore Banner is a trademark registered in the U.S. for The Venetoulis Institute for Local Journalism, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization. Learn more about supporting local journalism.

