Fiscal Analysis

Small Business Effect: The Clients' Security Trust Fund is a nonprofit organization intended to maintain the integrity of the legal profession by paying money to reimburse losses caused by lawyers who misuse their clients' funds. It is funded by annual fees paid by lawyers. If the Court of Appeals raises the annual assessment from $20 to $35, small law firms would experience expenditure increases of $15 per attorney per year. On the other hand, there would be more funds available to repay small businesses that are victims of attorney defalcation. As of June 30, 1998, 27,234 lawyers were subject to annual assessments, the fund's balance was $2,752,986, and the total estimated value of pending claims was $2,207,000. If the annual assessment is raised from $20 to $35, the Clients' Security Trust Fund would obtain approximately $408,510 in additional revenue in fiscal 2000.
