Analysis

Current Law: Chapter 503 of 1999 enacted the current requirement for paid leave for adoption with a sunset for the provision of July 1, 2002.

Background: The federal Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA) provides that employers must allow eligible employees (to be eligible an employee must worked for the employer for 12 months -- the time need not be continuous) to take unpaid leave of up to 12 weeks for certain events, including birth, adoption, or a serious medical condition of the employee or a member of the employee's immediate family. The employer has the option of allowing the employee to use paid leave for an FMLA absence. Certain employers, including those with less than 50 employees, are exempt from FMLA's requirements.

The State Personnel and Pensions Article provides the same leave for State employees in the event of birth or adoption. In either circumstance, State employees may use paid leave, such as sick leave, if they have sufficient accrued leave.
