Analysis

Current Law: Modified administration is available when all residuary legatees of a testate decedent and the heirs at law of an intestate decedent are limited to the decedent's personal representative, surviving spouse, and children. The personal representative must file an election for modified administration within three months of the date of appointment. The filing must indicate the consent of all residuary legatees or heirs at law. The law requires automatic revocation of modified administration for various reasons including failure by the personal representative to file a final report within ten months after appointment and make distribution within 12 months. Courts are not given authority to extend this deadline.

Background: Effective for decedents dying after October 1, 1997, special provisions for modified administration were enacted towards the goal of limiting the role of the Register of Wills and the Orphans' Court in the administration of certain smaller, less complex estates. The purpose of the provision was to encourage expeditious closing of an estate and distribution of assets. To this end, the formal inventory and account provisions under normal administration were replaced by the less rigorous final report.
