FISCAL AND POLICY NOTE

House Bill 1158

(Delegate O'Donnell, et al.)

Judiciary

Children - Joint Legal Custody and Equal Parenting Time - Preference

This bill provides that in an initial child custody proceeding, whether pendente lite or permanent, the court must first consider an award of joint legal custody of the child to the parents and physical custody of the child for approximately equal periods of time for each parent. If the court considers such an arrangement, but does not find it appropriate, the court must: (1) order an appropriate disposition; and (2) make a written finding within ten days of the order or make a specific finding on the record stating the reasons why the court did not award joint legal custody and approximately equal physical custody time for each parent and how the finding serves the best interest of the child.

The bill has prospective application and applies only to cases filed on or after the bill's October 1, 2003 effective date.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: This bill is not expected to directly affect governmental operations or finances.

Local Effect: None – see above.

Small Business Effect: None.

Analysis

Current Law: Maryland courts resolve custody disputes based on a determination of “what is in the child’s best interests.” Taylor v. Taylor, 306 Md. 290, 500 A.2d 964

(1986). In a custody dispute between the child's parents, the court examines numerous factors and weighs the advantages and disadvantages of the alternative environments. The criteria for judicial determination includes, but is not limited to: (1) the fitness of the parents; (2) the character and reputation of the parties; (3) the desire of the natural parents and any agreements between them; (4) the potential for maintaining natural family relations; (5) the preference of the child, when the child is of sufficient age and capacity to form a rational judgment; (6) material opportunities affecting the future life of the child; (7) the age, health, and sex of the child; (8) the residences of the parents and the opportunity for visitation; (9) the length of the separation of the parents; and (10) whether there was a prior voluntary abandonment or surrender of custody of the child. See: Montgomery County v. Sanders, 38 Md. App. 406 (1977).

In addition to the factors specified above, in cases in which the court is considering an award of joint custody, the court examines a range of factors particularly relevant to a determination of joint custody, including: (1) the capacity of the parents to communicate and reach shared decisions affecting the child's welfare; (2) the willingness of the parents to share custody; (3) the fitness of the parents; (4) the relationship established between the child and each parent; (5) the preference of the child; (6) the potential disruption of the child's social and school life; (7) the geographic proximity of parental homes; (8) the demands of parental employment; (9) the age and number of children; (10) the sincerity of the parents' request; (11) the financial status of the parents; (12) any impact on state or federal assistance; (13) the benefit to the parents; and (14) any other factors the court considers appropriate. See: Taylor v. Taylor, 306 Md. 290, 508 A.2d 964 (1986).

If there is a dispute as to visitation or custody, the court must also determine whether mediation of the dispute is appropriate and would be beneficial to the parties and any minor children and if there is a properly qualified mediator available to mediate the dispute. The court must not order mediation if there is a good faith representation of genuine physical or sexual abuse of a party or a child subject to the proceeding.

The court's discretion to determine custody or visitation is limited as provided by law if there is an allegation or evidence of abuse or neglect. If the court has reasonable grounds to believe that a child has been abused or neglected by a party in a custody proceeding, the court must determine whether the abuse or neglect is likely to occur if custody or visitation rights are granted to the party. Unless the court specifically finds that there is no further likelihood of child abuse or neglect by the party, the court must deny custody or visitation rights to that party except that the court may approve a supervised visitation arrangement that assures the safety and the physiological, psychological, and emotional well being of the child.

In a custody or visitation proceeding, the court must consider evidence of abuse against the other parent of a party's child, the party's spouse, or any child residing within the party's household, including the child who is the subject of the custody or visitation proceeding. If the court finds that a party has committed abuse against any of the aforementioned people, the court must make arrangements for custody or visitation that best protect the child who is the subject of the proceeding and the victim of abuse.

State and Local Fiscal Effect: This bill would require judges to alter the manner in which they make custody decisions, but is not expected to substantially impact operations of the Judiciary. Parents who do not want a joint or approximately equal physical custody arrangement would be required to rebut the presumption established in the bill. This bill would not alter case management standards and family services provided by the circuit courts and the Family Services Administration in the Administrative Office of the Courts.
