FISCAL AND POLICY NOTE

Senate Bill 813

(Senator Stoltzfus, et al.)

Judicial Proceedings

Real Property - Condemnation - Right to Repurchase Condemned Property

This bill requires a plaintiff in a condemnation proceeding to put the acquired property to public use within five years of the date of acquisition. If the property is not put to public use within five years, the defendant in the condemnation proceeding has the right to petition the court for an order to have the condemnation set aside and to reacquire the property for the amount of the original award. The defendant must petition the court for reacquisition of the property within five years and three months following the date of acquisition by the plaintiff.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: State revenues from the sale of condemned property could decrease under the bill. Any such decreases cannot be accurately estimated but could be significant. Expenditures would not be affected.

Local Effect: Local government revenues from the sale of condemned property could decrease under the bill. Any such decreases cannot be accurately estimated but could be significant. Expenditures would not be affected. This bill imposes a mandate on a unit of local government.

Small Business Effect: Potential meaningful.

Analysis

Bill Summary: The court must set aside the acquisition of the property, enter a judgment for the defendant, and revest the title acquired in the condemnation proceeding in the defendant, on finding that (1) the plaintiff has not put the condemned property to a public use within five years of the date of acquisition; (2) the defendant has exercised the right to petition the court in a timely manner; and (3) the defendant has paid the plaintiff or the clerk of court for the use of the plaintiff an amount equal to the consideration originally paid for the condemned property. The Court of Appeals must adopt rules of procedure governing these proceedings.

For the purposes of the bill, “defendant” means a person whose property has been condemned, or the successor in interest to the person, and “plaintiff” means the State, an instrumentality of the State, a political subdivision, or a successor instrumentality of the State or political subdivision to whom condemned property is conveyed.

Current Law: The power to take, or condemn, private property for public use is one of the inherent powers of state government and, through the State its political subdivisions. Courts have long held that this power, known as “eminent domain,” is derived from the sovereignty of the state. Both the federal and State constitutions limit the condemnation authority. Both constitutions establish two requirements for taking property through the power of eminent domain. First, the property taken must be for a “public use.” Secondly, the party whose property is taken must receive “just compensation.” In either event, the party whose property is being taken is generally entitled to a judicial proceeding prior to the taking of the property. However, the Maryland Constitution does authorize “quick-take” condemnations in limited circumstances prior to a court proceeding.

Public Use

There is no clear cut rule to determine whether a particular use of property taken through eminent domain is a “public use,” and Maryland courts have broadly interpreted the term. The Court of Appeals has recognized takings that encompass a “public benefit” or a “public purpose.” Maryland’s courts have given great deference to a legislative determination as to whether property should be taken for a particular public purpose.

The courts have stated that government may not simply transfer property from one private party to another. For example, in Van Witsen v. Gutman, 79 Md. 405 (1894), the Court of Appeals invalidated a condemnation by Baltimore City in which the court found the transfer would have benefited one private citizen at the cost of others. However, transferring property from one private party to another is not necessarily forbidden. In Prince George’s County v. Collington, 275 Md. 171 (1975), the Court of Appeals authorized the county to use its eminent domain authority to take private property to be used for economic development purposes, even though the property was not blighted. The Collington court enunciated the following rule: “projects reasonably designed to benefit the general public, by significantly enhancing the economic growth of the State or its subdivisions, are public uses, at least where the exercise of the power of condemnation provides an impetus which private enterprise cannot provide.” Id. at 191.

Just Compensation

The damages to be awarded for the taking of land are determined by the land’s “fair market value.” By statute, fair market value of the condemned property (property taken through eminent domain) is the price as of the valuation date for the highest and best use of the property that a willing seller would accept from a willing buyer, excluding any change in value proximately caused by the public project for which the property is needed.

Disposal of Land by State Highway Administration (SHA)

Notwithstanding any other statute to the contrary, if land acquired for transportation or other public purposes will not be used, SHA must dispose of it as soon as practicable after the completion or abandonment of the project for which the land was acquired. If the Secretary of Transportation determines that land from an abandoned project is no longer needed for any State transportation purpose, a county or municipality may acquire it for a transportation purpose, with the Secretary’s approval, on payment of the lesser of: (1) the land’s appraised value; or (2) the consideration originally paid for the land, plus simple interest at the fair market rate calculated from the time of acquisition to the time of disposition, and administrative costs.

If the land is not needed for a county or municipal transportation purpose, the person from whom the land was acquired or that person’s successor in interest has the right to reacquire it, on payment of an amount equal to the lesser of: (1) the land’s appraised value; or (2) the consideration originally paid for the land, plus simple interest at the fair market rate calculated from the time of acquisition to the time of disposition, and administrative costs.

If neither of those rights is exercised, the land must be disposed of in the same manner as if it were from a project that has been completed or as otherwise permitted.

For land from a completed project, SHA must notify the person from whom the property was acquired, or that person’s successor in interest, within 30 days after making a determination that the land is not needed and available for reacquisition. Within five years from the date the land was acquired, the person from whom it was acquired or that person’s successor may reacquire the land, on payment of an amount equal to the consideration originally paid. After five years from the date the land was acquired, the person or the successor has the right to reacquire the land at the current market value.

If the right to reacquire the land from a completed project is not exercised within eight months after SHA provides the required notice, SHA must sell the land at public auction.

Possible Plaintiffs

Possible plaintiffs to a condemnation action under Maryland law include the federal government, the State, a county, a municipal corporation, a corporation that transmits or supplies natural or artificial gas, an oil pipeline corporation, a telephone or telegraph company, a water company, and a railroad company.

Background: Recently, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Kelo v. City of New London, 125 S. Ct. 2655 (2005) that New London, Connecticut's use of its condemnation authority under a state law to require several homeowners in an economically depressed area to vacate their properties to make way for mixed use development did not violate the U.S. Constitution. In essence, the Kelo decision left the determination to state law as to whether eminent domain may be used for economic development purposes. An earlier decision, Berman v. Parker, 75 S. Ct. 98 (1954), had already found that taking a nonblighted property in a blighted area as part of an overall economic development scheme does not violate the U.S. Constitution.

Several measures have been introduced in Congress that would limit the use of eminent domain. To date, only one has passed. The appropriation measure that funds the Department of Transportation, the Judiciary, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development for federal fiscal 2006, P.L. 109-115, prohibits funds provided under that Act being used for projects that seek to use eminent domain for economic development that primarily benefits private entities, under certain circumstances.

Historically, the State has used its condemnation authority primarily for the construction of roads and highways. However, this has not always been the case. More recent examples include the construction by the Maryland Stadium Authority of Oriole Park at Camden Yards, M&T Bank Stadium, and the Hippodrome Theater in Baltimore City. The Maryland Economic Development Corporation, even though charged with the task of encouraging increased business activity and commerce and promoting economic development in the State and authorized by law to condemn property, reports that it has not exercised the eminent domain power.

According to responses to surveys conducted this interim by the Maryland Municipal League and the Maryland Association of Counties, local governments also have seldom exercised the power of eminent domain. When used, the purposes have been primarily for small, targeted public projects – for example, to construct an airport, a fire station, or a parking lot. On a larger scale, Baltimore City has exercised its condemnation powers for the redevelopment of the Inner Harbor and the Charles Center. Montgomery County used its condemnation authority as part of the downtown Silver Spring redevelopment.

In 2000, Baltimore County attempted to exercise eminent domain powers for revitalization in three aging residential areas; however, this project was petitioned to a local referendum and was rejected by the county voters at the general election that year by a margin of more than two to one and did not move forward.

State Fiscal Effect: In the event that the State does not put property acquired through condemnation to public use within five years, the State could lose the value of any increased equity in the property if the defendant petitions the court to reacquire the property at the price the State paid for it. For each parcel reacquired, revenues would decrease to the extent the property's current fair market value exceeds the fair market value of the property at the time it was obtained. The revenue loss could be significant, even with a relatively small number of affected properties. For example, SHA regularly disposes of property (either entire parcels or remainders of parcels) that are no longer needed for transportation projects.

Local Fiscal Effect: In the event that a unit of local government does not put property acquired through condemnation to public use within five years, the local government could lose the value of any increased equity in the property if the defendant petitions the court to reacquire the property at the price the local government paid for it. For each parcel reacquired, revenues would decrease to the extent the property's current fair market value exceeds the fair market value of the property at the time it was obtained. The revenue loss could be significant, even with a relatively small number of affected properties. In any event, the impact is likely to vary by jurisdiction.
