FISCAL AND POLICY NOTE

Senate Bill 486
Finance

(Senator Teitelbaum, et al.)

Consumer Protection - Personal Information Protection Act

This bill imposes duties on a “business” to protect an individual’s “personal information” and to provide notice of a security breach relating to an individual’s personal information.

Violation of the bill is an unfair or deceptive trade practice under the Maryland Consumer Protection Act.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: Assuming that the Consumer Protection Division receives fewer than 50 complaints per year stemming from this bill, any additional workload could be handled with existing resources.

Local Effect: None.

Small Business Effect: Minimal.

Analysis

Bill Summary: When a business is destroying a customer’s records containing the customer’s personal information, the business must take all reasonable steps to destroy or arrange for the destruction of the records in a manner that makes the information unreadable or undecipherable through any means.

A business that compiles, maintains, or makes available personal information of a Maryland resident must implement and maintain reasonable and appropriate security procedures and practices to protect the personal information from unauthorized access, destruction, use, modification, or disclosure. A business that discloses personal information under a contract with a nonaffiliated third party must require by contract that the third party comply with these requirements.

A business that compiles, maintains, or makes available records that include a Maryland resident's personal information must notify that individual of a breach of the security of a system if, as a result of the breach, the individual's personal information: (1) has been acquired by an unauthorized person; or (2) is reasonably believed to have been acquired by an unauthorized person. Generally, the notice must be given as soon as practicable after the business discovers or is notified about the breach.

The notification may be delayed: (1) if a law enforcement agency determines that it will impede a criminal investigation; or (2) to determine the scope of the breach and restore the system's integrity.

The notification may be given by written, electronic, telephonic, or substitute notice if specified conditions are met. The notice must include: (1) to the extent possible, a description of the categories of information, including which elements of personal information, that were, or are reasonably believed to have been, acquired; (2) contact information for the business making the notification; (3) specified contact information for the major consumer reporting agencies; and (4) specified contact and other information relating to the Federal Trade Commission and the Office of the Attorney General. A business must notify the Office of the Attorney General of the breach within 24 hours after it becomes aware of the breach. A waiver of the bill's notification requirements is void and unenforceable. Compliance with the notification requirements does not relieve a business from a duty to comply with any other legal requirements relating to the protection and privacy of personal information.

Compliance with a federal or State law is deemed compliance with the bill regarding the subject matter of that law if the law provides: (1) at least the same protections to personal information as the bill; and (2) disclosure requirements that are at least as thorough as the bill's.

In addition to the penalties under the Consumer Protection Act, an individual who is affected by a violation may bring a civil action against a violator to recover reasonable attorney's fees and the greater of $500 per violation or actual damages.

Current Law: A business's practices regarding records that contain personal information is not specifically regulated.

The Consumer Protection Division within the Office of the Attorney General is responsible for pursuing unfair and deceptive trade practice claims under the Maryland Consumer Protection Act. Upon receiving a complaint, the division must determine whether there are “reasonable grounds” to believe that a violation of the Act has occurred. Generally, if the division does find reasonable grounds that a violation has occurred, the division must seek to conciliate the complaint. The division may also issue cease and desist orders, or seek action in court, including an injunction or civil damages, to enforce the Act. Violators of the Act are subject to: (1) civil penalties of $1,000 for the first violation and $5,000 for subsequent violations; and (2) criminal sanction as a misdemeanor, with a fine of up to $1,000 and/or up to one year’s imprisonment.

Background: The Federal Trade Commission recently announced that ChoicePoint, Inc. would pay a civil penalty of $10 million and $5 million in consumer redress for violating the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act for failing to have adequate protections for wrongfully releasing consumer information. The settlement requires ChoicePoint to implement new procedures: (1) to ensure that it provides consumer reports only to legitimate businesses for lawful purposes; (2) to establish and maintain a comprehensive information security program; and (3) to obtain audits by an independent third-party security professional every other year until 2026.

Under the guidelines adopted jointly by federal banking regulators “[w]hen a financial institution becomes aware of an incident of unauthorized access to sensitive customer information, the institution should conduct a reasonable investigation to promptly determine the likelihood that the information has been or will be misused. If the institution determines that the misuse of its information about a customer has occurred or is reasonably possible, it should notify the affected customer as soon as possible.”

Several bills have been introduced in Congress that would establish federal standards for notifying individuals whose personal information may have been wrongfully obtained. Some of the bills contain broad preemption of similar state laws and state enforcement actions based on a violation of federal law. Others contain narrower preemptions and allow states to enforce their provisions in state or federal court.

Additional Information

Prior Introductions: Similar bills, SB 1002 and HB 1588, were introduced during the 2005 session. SB 1002 was referred to the Rules and Executive Nominations Committee, and HB 1588 was referred to the Economic Matters Committee. Both bills were withdrawn before being heard.
