FISCAL AND POLICY NOTE

House Bill 332
Judiciary

(Delegate Frank, et al.)

Judicial Proceedings

Victims of Crime - Burglary and Crimes of Violence - Civil Immunity

This bill specifies that a person is not liable for damages for a personal injury or the death of an individual who enters the person's dwelling or place of business with the intent to commit a crime of violence or a burglary in the first, second, or third degree. Immunity does not attach, however, if the person acts with malice or gross negligence. "Person" does not include a government entity. The bill does not limit or abrogate any immunity from civil liability or defense available to a person under any other provision of the Maryland Code or at common law.

The bill applies only prospectively to actions that arise on or after the bill's October 1, 2009 effective date.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: None. The bill does not materially affect the Judiciary's workload.

Analysis

Current Law: A person who has reasonable grounds to believe that the person is being attacked may use force that is reasonably necessary for protection against the potential injury. A person may not use force that is likely to cause death or serious bodily injury unless the person reasonably believes that he or she is in danger of serious bodily injury.

Section 14-101 of the Criminal Law Article defines a “crime of violence” to include abduction, arson, kidnapping, manslaughter, murder, rape, carjacking, first or second degree sexual offense, various types of assault, and attempts to commit the above crimes.

Background: In evaluating claims of self-defense in the criminal context, some states, like Maryland, have adopted a standard known as the “castle doctrine.” Under the castle doctrine, “a man faced with the danger of an attack upon his dwelling need not retreat from his home to escape the danger, but instead may stand his ground and, if necessary to repel the attack, may kill the attacker.” See Burch v. State, 346 Md. 253, 283-4, 696 A.2d 443, 458 (1997) quoting Crawford v. State, 231 Md. 354, 361, 190 A.2d 538, 541 (1963).

Twenty-one states (Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia, and Wyoming) have enacted castle doctrine legislation in recent years. With the exception of Indiana, Kansas, and South Dakota, the enacted legislation in all of the states addressed civil liability. Many of the civil immunity provisions preclude assailants from suing for medical bills and other damages as a result of any injuries that are inflicted by an individual who was a victim of a crime at the time the injuries were inflicted and direct courts to award court costs and fees to victims.
