Analysis

Bill Summary: Eligible noneconomic damages received by a taxpayer include amounts received as a result of a claim of unlawful discrimination whether by judgment or by settlement minus any compensation for (1) punitive damages; or (2) lost wages, salary or other compensation attributable to services performed or that would have been performed as an employee or a former or prospective employee but for a claimed violation of law.

Current Law /Background: Noneconomic damages received by a taxpayer as part of a discrimination claim settlement are taxable for federal and State income tax purposes.

Federal tax law allows taxpayers to deduct the certain attorney fees and court costs paid by, or on behalf of a taxpayer in connection with any action involving a claim of unlawful discrimination. The Maryland income tax conforms to federal tax law – these deductions flow through for State income tax purposes and typically will reduce State income and local income taxes.

Under the Internal Revenue Code, unlawful discrimination is any act that is unlawful under (1) specified federal civil rights legislation including the Civil Rights Act of 1991, The National Labor Relations Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, Section 105 of the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Fair Housing Act, and the American with Disabilities Act of 1990; (2) provisions of federal law related to whistleblower protection provisions; and (3) any provision of federal, state, or local law or common law claims permitted under federal, state, or local law providing for the enforcement of civil rights or regulating any aspect of the employment relationship, the discrimination against an employee, or any other retaliation or reprisal against an employee for asserting rights or taking other actions permitted by law.

Compensatory and punitive damages may be awarded in employment related cases involving intentional discrimination based on a person's race, color, national origin, sex (including pregnancy), religion, disability, or genetic information. Compensatory damages pay victims for out-of-pocket expenses caused by the discrimination (such as costs associated with a job search or medical expenses) and compensate them for any emotional harm suffered (such as mental anguish, inconvenience, or loss of enjoyment of life). Punitive damages may be awarded to punish an employer who has committed an especially malicious or reckless act of discrimination. There are limits on the amount of compensatory and punitive damages a person can recover and range from $50,000 for employers with less than 100 employees to $300,000 for employers with more than 500 employees.

The Case Processing Division of the Maryland Commission on Human Relations (MCHR) provides intake, investigation, mediation, and processing services for complaints related to housing, public accommodation, and employment. The division receives complaints directly from individuals who believe they have been victims of unlawful discrimination and also processes cases for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. In fiscal 2009, the division received a total of 834 individual complaints of discrimination, with 85% employment related, 10% housing, and 5% public accommodation. The division obtained $760,000 in monetary benefits for individuals in fiscal 2009.

Complaints may also be filed with the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) or applicable local government offices in Montgomery, Prince George's, Howard, and Baltimore counties. Most litigants in civil rights disputes are required to seek administrative remedies involving applicable federal or State agencies. Litigants not satisfied with these administrative outcomes can file a civil rights lawsuit to seek monetary or injunctive relief.

In federal fiscal 2009, a total of $294.2 million in monetary benefits was paid in all charge receipts filed and resolved under all statutes enforced by EEOC. According to the U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics, in calendar 2006 about 35,000 civil rights cases were filed in U.S. District Courts. Ninety percent of cases concluded from 1990 to 2006 involved private parties, and one-third of all cases were won by the plaintiff. Typically, three-quarters of all cases in which the plaintiff wins involves a monetary award. The median amount awarded ranged from $114,000 to $154,500, depending on the type of case. As with complaints filed with MHRC, employment related trials were the largest category (40%); however, federal courts deal with a much more diverse range of civil rights categories.

State Revenues: Subtraction modifications may be claimed beginning in tax year 2010. As a result, general fund revenues will decrease by about $400,000 annually beginning in fiscal 2011. This estimate is based on the amount of monetary benefits obtained for complaints involving MCHR and it is assumed that 2% of the estimated monetary damages paid to individuals filing complaints in U.S. District Courts and with EEOC are attributable to Maryland residents. Data were unavailable on the percentage of monetary benefits paid that would be eligible under the bill. It is assumed that 25% of monetary benefits will qualify under the bill. To the extent that a higher percentage qualifies, revenue losses will be greater. For example, if 75% of monetary benefits qualify, general fund revenues will decrease by $1.1 million annually.

State Expenditures: The Comptroller's Office reports that it will incur a one-time expenditure increase of $21,300 in fiscal 2011 to add the subtraction modification to the personal income tax form. This amount includes data processing changes to the SMART income tax return processing and imaging systems and systems testing.

Local Revenues: Local income tax revenues decrease by about 3% of the amount of subtraction modifications claimed. Accordingly, local income tax revenues decrease by about $250,000 annually beginning in fiscal 2011.
