FISCAL AND POLICY NOTE

Senate Bill 165 (Senator Colburn)
 Judicial Proceedings

Criminal Procedure - Office of the Public Defender - Representation

This emergency bill creates an exception to a requirement that legal representation be provided by the Office of the Public Defender (OPD) at all stages of a proceeding eligible for OPD representation under the Maryland Public Defender Act. Under the bill, OPD is not required to provide legal representation to an indigent individual at a hearing before a District Court commissioner or at a bail review in the District Court.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: General fund expenditures for OPD decrease by $12.4 million in FY 2012 as a result of the bill’s elimination of required OPD representation at District Court commissioner appearances and bail reviews in the District Court. Out-years reflect annualization and inflation. Additional decreases in general fund expenditures may occur for the Judiciary, the Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services, and the Department of State Police, the extent of which cannot be reliably predicted at this time.

Analysis

Current Law:

Initial Appearance of a Criminal Defendant: Within 24 hours after arrest, a criminal defendant is taken before a judicial officer – typically a District Court commissioner – for an initial appearance. At the initial appearance, the defendant is advised of (1) each offense charged; (2) the right to counsel; and (3) the right to a preliminary hearing, if applicable. In some jurisdictions, the defendant is given a District Court trial date at the initial appearance. Otherwise, the defendant is told that notice of the trial date will follow by mail.

If the defendant was arrested without a warrant, the commissioner must determine whether there was probable cause for the arrest. If it is determined that there was no probable cause, the defendant is released on personal recognizance with no other conditions of release. If it is determined that there was probable cause, the commissioner must also determine whether the defendant is eligible for release from custody prior to trial and, if so, under what conditions. A defendant who is denied pretrial release by the commissioner, or one who remains in custody 24 hours after the commissioner has set the conditions of release, is entitled to a bail review hearing before a judge. The primary purpose of the bail review hearing is to determine whether the conditions of release set by the commissioner should be continued, amended, or revoked.

Pretrial Release of a Criminal Defendant: A criminal defendant is entitled to be released pending trial unless a judge ultimately determines that no conditions can be placed on the defendant's release to reasonably ensure the defendant's appearance at trial and the safety of the alleged victim, another person, and the community. Historically, approximately 50% of people who appear before commissioners are released on personal recognizance. However, if a judicial officer determines that release on personal recognizance alone is not appropriate, or the defendant is by law ineligible for release on recognizance, the defendant may be released prior to trial only by posting bail in an amount set by the judicial officer.

In determining whether a defendant should be released and the conditions of pretrial release, the judicial officer is required to take into account the following information, if available: (1) the nature and circumstances of the offense; (2) the nature of the evidence against the defendant and the potential sentence upon conviction; (3) the defendant's prior record and history with regard to appearing in court as required; (4) the defendant's employment status and history, family ties, financial resources, reputation, character and mental condition, and length of residence in the community and the State; (5) the potential danger of the defendant to himself or herself, the victim, or others; (6) recommendations of the State's Attorney and any agency that conducts a pretrial release investigation; (7) information provided by the defendant or the defendant's counsel; and (8) any other factor bearing on the risk of a willful failure to appear and the safety of the alleged victim, another person, or the community, including all prior convictions and any prior adjudications of delinquency that occurred within three years of the date the defendant is charged as an adult.

In most cases, pretrial release determinations are made at the defendant's initial appearance before a District Court commissioner. A commissioner may not, however, authorize the release of certain defendants, including defendants registered with the sex offender registry maintained by the Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services (DPSCS) and defendants charged with specific offenses (e.g., crimes of violence, violation of a protective order, drug kingpin, etc.). Pretrial release of such defendants may be authorized only by a judge, and only on suitable bail, on any other conditions that will reasonably ensure that the defendant will not flee or pose a danger to others, or on both bail and such other conditions. Please see Appendix 1 for a more comprehensive list of defendants ineligible for pretrial release by a District Court commissioner.

At the initial appearance, the commissioner has access to several criminal justice databases to review the defendant's criminal history and to determine whether there are any pending charges, any prior occasions when the defendant failed to appear in court, or any outstanding warrants. The commissioner also relies on information provided in the statement of probable cause or charging document, the defendant's RAP sheet, and information learned from the defendant.

In some jurisdictions, a pretrial investigation services unit provides verified factual information that becomes available to assist the judge in setting conditions for release at a bail review hearing. The investigation by the pretrial services unit could include a community background check, verification of employment, information provided by the defendant or the defendant's family, and additional factors concerning the defendant's criminal history that were not available to the commissioner.

Right to Counsel: Criminal defendants are advised of their right to legal representation upon arrest and at their initial appearance. Written notice of this right is included with the charging document, which is given to and discussed with the defendant at the initial appearance. The notice is read to those who are unable to read and is typically signed by the defendant to acknowledge its review and receipt. The notice explains how a lawyer can be helpful to the defendant and advises the defendant that OPD provides legal representation to a defendant who is subject to incarceration on conviction and is unable to afford private counsel. The defendant is referred to the court clerk for assistance in locating and applying for assistance from the public defender.

The defendant is also told not to wait until the day of trial to get a lawyer and that the right to counsel can be waived by a defendant's inaction. The defendant is advised that if he or she appears for trial without a lawyer, a judge could require the defendant to proceed to trial without representation.

If the defendant is served with a criminal summons or citation rather than arrested, the initial appearance is before a judge on the date of arraignment or trial. The judge will advise the defendant of the nature of the charges and the right to counsel and confirm that the defendant received a copy of the charging document.

If an appropriate judicial officer has not previously advised the defendant of these rights before the trial date, the case will be postponed so the defendant can have an opportunity to obtain counsel and prepare a defense.

Office of the Public Defender: In Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963), the United States Supreme Court held that states must provide legal representation to criminal defendants charged with serious offenses who are unable to afford their own attorneys. Under the Maryland Public Defender Act, an indigent defendant or party must be provided representation in:

- a criminal or juvenile proceeding in which a defendant or party is alleged to have committed a serious offense;
- a criminal or juvenile proceeding in which an attorney is constitutionally required to be present prior to presentment being made before a commissioner or judge;
- a postconviction proceeding for which the defendant has a right to an attorney under Title 7 of the Criminal Procedure Article;
- any other proceeding in which confinement under a judicial commitment of an individual in a public or private institution may result;
- a proceeding involving children in need of assistance under § 3–813 of the Courts Article; or
- a family law proceeding under Title 5, Subtitle 3, Part II or Part III of the Family Law Article, including (1) for a parent, a hearing in connection with guardianship or adoption; (2) a guardianship review hearing for which the parent has not waived the right to notice; and (3) an appeal.

Legal representation must be provided to an indigent individual in all stages of a proceeding listed above, including criminal proceedings, custody, interrogation, preliminary hearing, arraignment, trial, and appeal. Representation of an indigent individual by OPD or by a panel attorney must continue until the final disposition of the case or until the assigned attorney is relieved by the Public Defender or order of the court in which the case is pending.

Background: In DeWolfe v. Richmond, No. 34, (September Term 2011), the Maryland Court of Appeals held that under the Maryland Public Defender Act, no bail determination may be made by a District Court commissioner concerning an indigent defendant without the presence of counsel, unless representation by counsel is waived.

In the case, the facts were undisputed that the initial appearances of criminal defendants in Baltimore City are not conducted in a courtroom, open to the public, or recorded. The initial appearances occur at the Central Booking and Intake Facility (CBIF) in a small room with the defendant and the commissioner on opposite sides of a plexiglass window talking through a speaker system. The commissioner is not required to give Miranda warnings. The commissioner may ask the defendant about residence, family, employment history, and community ties and the answers may be used against the defendant at trial. If the commissioner does not release the defendant at this appearance, the defendant is presented to a District Court judge for a bail review hearing immediately or at the next session of court.

The plaintiffs in the case represent a class of indigent criminal defendants who were arrested, detained at CBIF, brought before a commissioner for initial bail hearings, and denied representation by counsel at the initial bail hearings. In a class action complaint filed in 2006, the plaintiffs named as defendants: the District Court of Maryland; the Chief Judge of the District Court of Maryland; the State Coordinator of Commissioner Activity; the Administrative Judge of the District Court for Baltimore City; the Administrative Commissioner for Baltimore City; and the Commissioners of the District Court of Baltimore City. Both parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment. After a hearing on the motions, the circuit court certified the class action and granted summary judgment in favor of the District Court defendants.

The plaintiffs filed an appeal to the Court of Special Appeals. While the case was pending in the intermediate court, the Court of Appeals granted a writ of certiorari on its own initiative and vacated the circuit court's order, directing that the case be dismissed if the plaintiffs failed to assert claims against the Public Defender.

On remand to the circuit court, the plaintiffs added the Public Defender as a defendant. The Public Defender argued that the plaintiffs had strong federal and State constitutional claims for representation at the initial appearance, but the court should not find for the plaintiffs and order legal representation absent the necessary funding. The Public Defender asked for a stay and other remedies that would delay relief until funding was found.

In 2008, while the case was being litigated, the United States Supreme Court issued an opinion in Rothgery v. Gillespie County, 554 U.S. 191 (2008). In Rothgery, an individual who was mistakenly identified as a felon was arrested for possession of a firearm by a felon. Mr. Rothgery was taken before a Texas magistrate, who found probable cause for his arrest, informed him of the charges against him, and set bail at $5,000. Rothgery was released after posting a surety bond but was later indicted by a grand jury. After the indictment, Mr. Rothgery was rearrested and jailed. Following these events, the court appointed an attorney for him. Appointed counsel was able to determine the mistake and was able to have the indictment dismissed, but only after Mr. Rothgery spent three weeks in jail because he was unable to post bail. Mr. Rothgery filed a civil rights action against Gillespie County on the grounds that had he been appointed counsel at the magistrate hearing, he would not have been subsequently indicted, rearrested, and incarcerated.

The Supreme Court held that the Sixth Amendment right to counsel attached at the magistrate hearing because it was the point at which a defendant learns of the charges against him and is subject to restrictions on liberty, and as such, is the initiation of adversarial judicial proceedings that trigger that right. However, the court did not conclude that the hearing was a critical stage requiring appointment of counsel. Instead the court opined that counsel “must be appointed within a reasonable time after attachment to allow for adequate representation at any critical stage before trial, as well as at trial itself.” Rothgery, 554 U.S. at 212.

In 2010, the Circuit Court for Baltimore City issued its order that the initial appearance before a commissioner is a critical stage of a criminal prosecution and therefore indigent arrestees in Baltimore City have a federal and State constitutional right to be appointed counsel. The circuit court cited the Rothgery case for this proposition. The court also ruled that the plaintiffs were entitled to counsel under the Maryland Public Defender Act. After the court issued an order staying the decision pending appellate review, both parties appealed to the Court of Special Appeals. For a second time, the Court of Appeals granted certiorari.

The plaintiffs presented the following questions for review: (1) do indigent defendants have a statutory right to counsel at initial bail hearings under the Public Defender Act; (2) do indigent defendants have federal and State constitutional rights to counsel at initial bail hearings; and (3) did the trial court err by failing to order an injunction that the decision would be stayed pending appeal. The Public Defender asked if the circuit court had erred in its declaratory judgment that the plaintiffs had a right to representation without addressing a remedy and how the funding shortfall may practicably be addressed.

The Court of Appeals held that the plaintiffs have a right under the Maryland Public Defender Act to be represented in any bail hearing conducted before a commissioner, but the court did not address the plaintiffs’ federal and State constitutional claims of a right to representation. The Court of Appeals also held that the circuit court did not err in issuing its decision without consideration of the costs and provided that the plaintiffs may seek future injunctive relief.

The Court of Appeals stated that the language of the Maryland Public Defender Act was plain and unambiguous. The court found that an initial appearance marks the beginning of the formal criminal adversarial process, is clearly encompassed within the statutory term “criminal proceeding,” and may result in the defendant’s incarceration. According to the court, the commissioner is required to determine whether or not the defendant should be released on personal recognizance or incarcerated until the bail review hearing and makes the determination based on personal facts obtained, in large part, from the defendant. The court noted that a defendant may make incriminating statements at the initial hearing that might result in the defendant remaining incarcerated for weeks or months until the trial. For these reasons, the court held that the initial bail hearing is a stage of a criminal proceeding. The court also noted that the Public Defender agreed that the plaintiffs have a right to counsel in the initial bail hearings.

The court also cited several prior cases for the proposition that the budget of the Office of the Public Defender has never been relevant in the court’s obligation to uphold the law. The court was unable to recall any instance in which it had delayed implementing a substantive right, such as the statutory right of an indigent defendant to public defender representation, out of concern for the financial costs of the implementation.

The ruling was originally expected to take effect through a court mandate on February 4, 2012. However, OPD filed a motion requesting that the new requirements be stayed until August 1, 2012. The Court of Appeals will consider OPD’s motion on February 16, 2012, which would make that date the earliest possible effective date for implementation of the ruling.

State Expenditures: General fund expenditures for OPD decrease by $12.4 million in fiscal 2012 and by $33.1 million beginning in fiscal 2016 as a result of the bill’s elimination of required OPD representation at District Court commissioner appearances and bail reviews in the District Court and circuit courts. Additional decreases in general fund expenditures may occur for the Judiciary, the Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services, and the Department of State Police, the extent of which cannot be reliably predicted at this time. A more detailed description of the projected impact on State expenditures is discussed below.

Office of the Public Defender: Assuming an effective date of February 16, 2012, general fund expenditures for OPD decrease by $12,393,582 in fiscal 2012. This accounts for $10,322,192 in reduced expenditures attributable to initial appearances and $2,071,390 in reduced expenditures for District Court bail reviews. General fund expenditures decrease for OPD by $33,070,063 in fiscal 2016, with $27,983,507 attributable to initial appearances and $5,086,556 attributable to bail reviews.

This estimate reflects the cost of:

- employing panel attorneys at a rate of $50 per hour for 493,067 hours per year (the number of commissioner work hours in fiscal 2011) to provide adequate coverage and legal representation at initial appearances before District Court commissioners throughout the State;
- employing the following temporary support staff employees at a rate commensurate with their full-time State employee counterparts (50 intake specialists, 2 fiscal accounts clerk, 1 human resources associate, and 3 information technology specialists) to assist with support functions related to representation at initial appearances;
- employing panel attorneys at a rate of $50 per hour for a number of hours equivalent to 34 full-time assistant public defenders based on a 2,080 hour work year to provide adequate coverage and legal representation at judicial bail review hearings in the District Court and the circuit courts, as determined using case volume and site distribution; and
- employing the following temporary support staff employees at a rate commensurate with their full-time State employee counterparts (34 intake specialists, 1 fiscal accounts clerk, 1 human resources associate, and 2 information technology specialists) to assist with bail review representation.

Given the February 16, 2012 deadline for OPD compliance with the DeWolfe ruling, this estimate assumes that OPD will opt for the quickest method of implementation, which is the use of panel attorneys and temporary administrative support staff. Because panel attorneys are employed at a rate of $50 per hour, they are typically a more expensive option.

This estimate assumes:

- that the requirement that OPD provide legal representation at initial appearances and bail reviews will go into effect on February 16, 2012;
- that it is feasible for OPD to comply with the judicial order within the timeframe mandated by the court;
- that OPD will be able to find and employ sufficient panel attorneys to provide legal representation to indigent defendants at initial appearances and District Court bail reviews;

- that to ensure adequate coverage and timely legal representation at initial appearances before a District Court commissioner, OPD will have to employ panel attorneys sufficient to match the number of District Court commissioner work hours per year; and
- that given the timeframe for initial appearances and the 24/7 nature of initial appearances, OPD will not have adequate time to conduct a financial assessment of potential clients and will likely agree to represent any individual who agrees to OPD representation at an initial appearance.

These estimates are based on meeting the judicial order with increased temporary staffing and use of panel attorneys. Actual cost avoidance/savings realized as a result of the bill may be lower in future years if, absent this bill, reduced actual staffing needs, use of regular position, streamlined procedures, or technological developments provide a more cost-effective way of meeting the legal representation requirements.

Initial Appearances Before District Court Commissioners: There are 278 District Court commissioners in the State, including the Coordinator of Commissioner Activity. Commissioners occupy 41 stations with 125 desks throughout the State and handled 171,144 initial appearances in fiscal 2010 and 176,523 initial appearances in fiscal 2011, as detailed in Exhibit 1. According to the Judiciary, commissioners granted a release on personal recognizance to 77,704 defendants (44%) in fiscal 2011.

District Court commissioners worked 493,067 hours during fiscal 2011. Though these hours include hours spent on numerous other commissioner functions, it is assumed that to comply with the order, OPD would have to provide staff to accommodate all commissioner hours worked.

Judicial Bail Review Hearings: According to OPD, approximately 85,000 bail review hearings occur in 34 District Court locations statewide each year. Additional bail review hearings take place in the 24 circuit courts. Under the recent ruling, OPD will have to represent indigent defendants at these hearings. Bail review hearings are conducted during standard business hours. Based on location coverage and historical caseload data, OPD anticipates the need to hire 34 attorneys to provide effective legal representation at District Court judicial bail reviews, as detailed in Exhibit 2.

Under the bill, OPD will still be required to represent indigent defendants at bail review hearings in the circuit court. However, given the relatively small number of circuit court bail review hearings, it is assumed that OPD will be able to comply with that portion of the requirement with existing personnel.

In addition to attorneys, OPD will need to hire 38 full-time administrative staff employees to assist with the performance of this function. These administrative employees include 34 intake specialists, 2 information technology specialists, 1 fiscal accounts clerk, and 1 human resources associate.

OPD provides representation in District Court judicial bail reviews in Baltimore City (using 6.4 attorneys), Harford County (0.5 attorneys), and Montgomery County (0.5 attorneys). Bail review attorneys in Harford and Montgomery counties share coverage of bail reviews and assist with other cases. OPD's costs for bail reviews in Baltimore City are partially supported by reimbursable funds from the Division of Correction ($601,000 in fiscal 2012). OPD advises that the Baltimore City grant has not been increased in 15 years, and does not cover the cost of conducting bail reviews in that jurisdiction.

Expenditures for OPD bail reviews in Harford County are partially offset by an annual appropriation from Harford County ($24,948 in fiscal 2012). OPD has been advised that Harford County will not maintain this grant since OPD is required to provide bail review representation regardless of assistance by the county. OPD provides funding for bail review hearings in Montgomery County since it is required to provide this service under Montgomery County's public defender statute, which predates the Maryland Public Defender Act.

These estimates do not address current OPD caseloads that are in excess of caseload standards. OPD caseloads have been a chronic issue. For the fiscal 2010 baseline budget, the Department of Legislative Services estimated that OPD needed $3.7 million for 55 new staff attorneys and $952,000 for 25.5 law clerks/secretaries/social workers to meet caseload standards. The total cost associated with this initiative was $4.6 million.

According to Managing for Results, in calendar 2009, 8% of OPD district offices met District Court caseload standards. Since then, no OPD districts have met District Court caseload standards. Since calendar 2009, 17% of OPD district offices have met circuit court caseload standards.

Judiciary/Administrative of the Courts: Currently, a typical commissioner initial appearance involves the defendant and the commissioner, and the appearance must occur within 24 hours of arrest. Initial appearances currently take between 15 to 30 minutes to complete. It is unclear at this time to what extent the addition of a public defender and a State's Attorney (should the State's Attorney wish to participate) will increase the average time spent on an initial appearance. If the average time for an initial appearance is extended to the point that commissioners are unable to meet the 24-hour requirement, the District Court may need to employ additional commissioners.

Public Safety and Correctional Services: In Baltimore City, District Court initial appearances take place at CBIF, which is operated by DPSCS. Commissioner appearances are conducted in small rooms (some as small as 3 feet x 5 feet), with plexiglass separating the commissioner from the defendant. Police officers or guards are present in the room when the defendant makes his/her appearance. Additional security may be needed with the addition of a public defender and (possibly) a State's Attorney within this confined space.

Additional costs may be incurred if internal spaces within CBIF need to be remodeled to accommodate the additional participants in commissioner appearances and provide space for public defenders to meet with clients confidentially. DPSCS advises that CBIF cannot be expanded.

This increase could be offset by more arrestees obtaining pretrial release through legal representation at an initial appearance and bail review hearing as well as possible diversion to alternative programs to incarceration through early identification by and advocacy of a public defender. The extent to which legal representation at these stages by a public defender would result in earlier releases than occurs under the existing system cannot be reliably quantified at this time.

Department of State Police: Should the ruling result in delays in the initial appearance process, State troopers will have to spend more time with detainees while they wait for their attorneys, resulting in reduced patrol time and potential overtime costs. Since the bill eliminates mandatory OPD legal representation at initial appearances, the Department of State Police could experience significant future general fund savings as a result of the bill.

Local Expenditures: Local expenditures significantly decrease as a result of the bill's provisions.

State's Attorneys: The recent ruling does not require State's Attorneys to be present at commissioner initial appearances. Whether State's Attorneys adopt a policy of appearing at all initial appearances at which a public defender is present or only appearances for particular defendants remains to be seen and will vary by jurisdiction. However, the ruling may necessitate the hiring of additional State's Attorneys, which would result in significant increases in local expenditures.

Local Law Enforcement: In some jurisdictions, commissioner appearances are conducted in one location (often referred to as a central processing unit) with its own security staff. In those jurisdictions, law enforcement officers transport defendants to the central processing unit and transfer custody of the defendant to the unit's security staff. In other jurisdictions, the law enforcement officer who made the arrest maintains custody of the defendant and waits with the defendant until the conclusion of the initial appearance, when the arrestee is either released or transferred to the local jail. If the ruling's changes to commissioner hearings results in lengthier hearings and longer waiting periods between an arrest and initial appearance, then law enforcement officers units in smaller jurisdictions will spend more time waiting for hearings and less time on patrol. These jurisdictions may need to hire additional officers to maintain patrol duties. Talbot County, for instance, only assigns two police officers to patrol the county at night.

Local Correctional Facilities: As previously mentioned, recent changes to the initial appearance process may result in a backlog of cases. This backlog could result in an increase in expenditures due to an increase in the average daily population of local correctional facilities and the potential need for additional space. This increase could be offset by more arrestees obtaining pretrial release through legal representation at an initial appearance and bail review and possible diversion to alternative programs to incarceration through early identification by and advocacy of a public defender. The extent to which legal representation by a public defender would result in earlier releases than occurs under the existing system cannot be reliably quantified at this time. Per diem operating costs of local detention facilities have ranged from approximately $60 to $160 per inmate in recent years.
