Analysis

Current Law/Background: Chapter 131 of 2012 (HB 618) established a Task Force to Study Access of Individuals with Mental Illness to Regulated Firearms and specified three areas of concern to consider. The task force is staffed by GOCCP and filed its report of findings and recommendations on December 31, 2012. The task force established three workgroups to study each area of concern:

- The first workgroup studied the adequacy of State laws and policies relating to the access of law enforcement officers to mental health records and whether, and to what extent, the State should expand access of law enforcement officers to certain mental health records.
- The second workgroup studied whether existing statutory and regulatory provisions adequately protect the public as well as the civil rights of individuals with mental illness.
- The third workgroup studied the adequacy of State laws and policies relating to the access of individuals with a history of mental illness to all regulated firearms.

The task force report has seven findings, with nine recommendations. The recommendations include the need for additional research, additional mandated reporting by mental health professionals and law enforcement, mandatory firearm seizures under certain circumstances, additional training for law enforcement personnel and mental health professionals, expansion of crisis intervention teams, changes in funding allocations for continuing education and local jurisdictions, and the establishment of a process for full restoration of firearms possession and purchasing rights in accordance with specified federal standards. The detailed findings and recommendations of the task force are contained in the full task force report which can be found online at: <http://www.goccp.maryland.gov/legislation/guns-mental-illness-task-force.php>.
