Analysis

Current Law/Background: On January 3, 2013, the Return to Prudent Banking Act of 2013 was introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives. The Act has several provisions which serve to create a separation between commercial banking and investment banking institutions. Among these provisions, the Act (1) prohibits specified individuals from affiliating with both commercial banking and investment banking institutions; (2) revives the Banking Act of 1933 (Glass-Steagall Act); and (3) makes technical and conforming changes to the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLB Act).

As a response to the Great Crash of 1929, the Glass-Steagall Act was passed in 1933 with the intention of placing a barrier between commercial and investment banking. Among its provisions was a prohibition on commercial banks from underwriting securities, effectively forcing a bank to choose between being a commercial banking institution and an investment banking institution. In 1956, the Bank Holding Company Act was passed as an extension of the Glass-Steagall Act and placed further restrictions on commercial banking institutions, including a prohibition on underwriting insurance. In 1999, the GLB Act repealed the Glass-Steagall Act and, thus, allowed financial institutions to provide a wider range of services.
