Senate Bill 1011

(Senator Jennings)

Judicial Proceedings

Criminal Law - Crimes Against Property - Right to Defend Property

---

This bill establishes that an occupant of a dwelling is justified in using any degree of physical force, including deadly physical force, against another person if (1) the other person has made an unlawful entry into the dwelling and (2) the occupant has a reasonable belief that the other person has committed, intends to commit, or is committing a crime against a person or property in addition to the unlawful entry and might use physical force, no matter how slight, against an occupant. An individual who uses physical force under these circumstances is immune from criminal prosecution for the use of the force.

The bill's provisions do not apply if the person who is not the occupant is (1) a law enforcement officer, firefighter, or emergency response personnel performing official duties or (2) a person with express permission to enter the dwelling.

Analysis

Current Law/Background: Self-defense is a common law doctrine that has been addressed by Maryland courts on numerous occasions. To succeed on a claim of self-defense, the accused must have (1) not been the aggressor or provoked the conflict; (2) had reasonable grounds to believe that he/she was in apparent imminent or immediate danger of losing his/her own life or incurring serious bodily harm from his/her assailant or potential assailant; (3) actually believed at the time that he/she faced this type of danger; and (4) not used more force than the situation demanded. See Marquardt v. State, 164 Md. App. 95, 140 (2005). See also Sydnor v. State, 365 Md. 205, 216, A.2d 669, 675 (2001).

Included in the doctrine of self-defense is a duty to retreat, that is, a duty by the individual claiming self-defense to retreat and escape the danger if it was in his/her power to do so and was consistent with maintaining his/her safety. See Sydnor, 365 Md. at 216, 776 A.2d at 675. Use of deadly force traditionally has not been permissible in defense of property alone. Traditionally, under the common law, the right to the use of deadly force in self-defense did not apply until the claimant “retreated to the wall.”

Some states, like Maryland, have adopted an exception to the duty to retreat known as the “castle doctrine.” Under the castle doctrine, “a man faced with the danger of an attack upon his/her dwelling need not retreat from his/her home to escape the danger, but instead may stand their ground and, if necessary to repel the attack, may kill the attacker.” Burch v. State, 346 Md. 253, 283-4, 696 A.2d 443, 458 (1997) quoting Crawford v. State, 231 Md. 354, 361, 190 A.2d 538, 541 (1963). Nationally, courts are divided as to whether a duty to retreat exists under the castle doctrine in situations involving cohabitants, guests, and invitees.

Other states, however, have expanded on the castle doctrine by extending the exception to the duty to retreat to locations outside of a person’s dwelling. These laws, commonly referred to as “stand your ground” laws, vary by jurisdiction; however, in general, they establish that a person does not have a duty to retreat from an attacker in any place where the person has a right to be. According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, as of August 30, 2013, at least 22 states have enacted such laws (Alabama, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, and West Virginia). In nine of these states, the statute includes “stand your ground” language.

Additional Information

Prior Introductions: Several similar bills have been introduced in recent years. HB 1185 of 2014, HB 992 of 2010, HB 985 of 2009, and HB 1075 of 2008 all received unfavorable reports from the House Judiciary Committee. HB 455/SB 518 of 2007 received hearings in the House Judiciary and Senate Judicial Proceedings committees, respectively, but no further action was taken. HB 589 of 2006 received an unfavorable report by the House Judiciary Committee. Its cross file, SB 870, received a hearing in the Senate Judicial Proceedings Committee, but no further action was taken.

Cross File: HB 608 (Delegate Parrott, et al.) - Judiciary.
