Senate Bill 201
Finance

(Senator Lee)

Commercial Law - Personal Information Protection Act - Revisions

This bill expands the Maryland Personal Information Protection Act (MPIPA) by (1) covering additional types of personal information; (2) expanding the types of businesses that are required to implement and maintain reasonable security procedures and practices to protect personal information from unauthorized use; (3) shortening the period within which businesses must provide required notifications to consumers after a data breach; and (4) requiring additional information to be provided to the Office of the Attorney General (OAG) after a breach has occurred. Violation of the bill is an unfair, abusive, or deceptive trade practice under the Maryland Consumer Protection Act (MCPA), subject to MCPA's civil and criminal penalty provisions.

Fiscal Summary

State Effect: The bill's imposition of existing penalty provisions does not have a material impact on State finances or operations. OAG, Consumer Protection Division, can handle the bill's requirements with existing resources.

Local Effect: The bill's imposition of existing penalty provisions does not have a material impact on local government finances or operations.

Small Business Effect: Meaningful.

Analysis

Bill Summary: The bill expands the definition of “personal information” under MPIPA to include:

- activity-tracking data (when in combination with an individual’s first name or first initial and last name, and when such data is not encrypted, redacted, or otherwise protected by another method that renders the information unreadable or unusable);
- genetic information of an individual, as specified; and
- nonpublic social media information about an individual, including communications, postings, pictures, videos, connections between individuals, connections between accounts, and actions.

Security Procedures

The bill requires a business that maintains (in addition to a business that owns or licenses) personal information of a Maryland resident to implement and maintain reasonable security procedures and practices that are appropriate to the nature of the personal information maintained and the nature and size of the business and its operations.

Security Breaches

For a business that owns, licenses, or maintains personal data, unless the business reasonably determines that a breach does not create a likelihood that personal information has been (or will be) misused, the business must notify the individual of the breach. Generally, the required notification must be given as soon as reasonably practicable. However, the bill requires the notification to be provided within 30 (rather than 45) days after the business discovers (or is notified) of the breach. (Pursuant to current law, a third-party business may not charge a fee for providing the information needed to fulfill notification requirements under MPIPA.)

For a business that maintains personal data, generally, the business must notify the owner or licensee of the breach as soon as practicable; however, the bill requires the notification to be provided within 10 days (rather than 45 days) after the business discovers (or is notified) of the breach.

If a required notification is delayed because a law enforcement agency determines that the notification will impede a criminal investigation or jeopardize homeland or national security, notification must be given as soon as reasonably practicable, but no later than 3 days (rather than 30 days) after the law enforcement agency makes the required determination.

Methods of Notification

The bill also modifies the methods for providing notification of breaches. Specifically, the bill requires (rather than authorizes) a business that owns, licenses, or maintains personal data to provide notification of the breach by written notice, electronic mail, or by telephone. (Notification by electronic mail may only be provided if specified conditions are met.) The bill repeals a provision that allows substitute notice to be given if providing the notice is cost prohibitive or if the business does not have sufficient contact information.

In addition, the notification must be provided by (1) email, if the business has an email address for the individual; (2) conspicuous posting on the website of the business, if the business maintains a website; and (3) notification to major media outlets.

Contents of Notice to the Office of the Attorney General:

For data breaches involving a business that owns, licenses, or maintains personal information, the bill expands the information that must be included in a notice provided to OAG. At a minimum, the notice must include:

- the number of affected Maryland residents;
- a description of the breach, including how it occurred and any vulnerabilities that were exploited;
- any steps the business has taken (or plans to take) relating to the breach of the security of a system; and
- a sample of each form of notice that will be sent to consumers as required.

Current Law/Background:

Maryland Personal Information Protection Act

When a business is destroying a customer's, employee's, or former employee's records containing personal information, the business must take reasonable steps to protect against unauthorized access to or use of the personal information, taking specified considerations into account.

To protect personal information from unauthorized access, use, modification, or disclosure, a business that owns or licenses personal information of a Maryland resident must implement and maintain reasonable and appropriate security procedures and practices. A business that uses a nonaffiliated third party as a service provider and discloses personal information about a Maryland resident under a written contract with the third-party must require, by contract, that the third-party implement and maintain reasonable security procedures and practices that are (1) appropriate to the nature of the disclosed information and (2) reasonably designed to help protect the information from unauthorized access, use, modification, disclosure, or destruction. This provision applies to a written contract that is entered into on or after January 1, 2009.

A business that owns, licenses, or maintains computerized data that includes personal information of a Maryland resident, upon the discovery or notification of a breach of the security of a system, must conduct, in good faith, a reasonable and prompt investigation to determine the likelihood that personal information has been or will be misused as a result of the breach. If, after the investigation, the business reasonably believes that the breach has resulted or will result in the misuse of personal information of a Maryland resident, the business must notify the individual of the breach. Generally, the notice must be given as soon as reasonably practicable (but no later than 45 days after the business conducts the required investigation). If the business determines that notification is not required, the business must maintain the records related to the determination for three years.

A business that maintains computerized data that includes personal information that it does not own or license must notify the owner or licensee of the personal information of a breach and share information relevant to the breach as soon as reasonably practicable (but no later than 45 days) after the business discovers or is notified of the breach. Such a third-party business may not charge a fee for providing the information needed for the required notification to the owner or licensee of the data. Moreover, the owner or licensee may not use information relative to the breach for purposes other than (1) providing notification of the breach; (2) protecting or securing personal information; or (3) providing notification to national information security organizations created for information-sharing and analysis of security threats, to alert and avert new or expanded breaches.

Required notifications may be delayed (1) if a law enforcement agency determines that it will impede a criminal investigation or jeopardize homeland or national security or (2) to determine the scope of the breach, identify the individuals affected, or restore the system's integrity.

Consumer notification must include a description of categories of information acquired by the unauthorized user, the business' contact information, and contact information for the major consumer reporting agencies and specified government agencies. The notification may be given by mail or telephone; electronic mail or other forms of notice may be used if specified conditions are met. Prior to consumer notification, a business must notify OAG of the breach after it discovers or is notified of the breach.

In the case of a breach of a security system involving an individual's email account – but no other specified personal information – the business may comply with the required notification in electronic or other form. The notification must direct the individual whose personal information has been breached to promptly (1) change the individual's password and security question or answer, as applicable, or (2) take other appropriate steps to protect the email account, as well as all other online accounts for which the individual uses the same user name or email and password (or security question or answer).

Generally, the required notification may be given to the individual by any method described in § 14-3504 of the Commercial Law Article. However, the required notification may not be given by sending notification by email to the affected account. The notification may, however, be given by a clear and conspicuous notice delivered to the individual online while the individual is connected to the affected email account from an Internet protocol address or online location from which the business knows the individual customarily accesses the account.

A waiver of the notification requirements is void and unenforceable. Compliance with the notification requirements does not relieve a business from a duty to comply with any federal legal requirements relating to the protection and privacy of personal information.

Maryland Consumer Protection Act

An unfair, abusive, or deceptive trade practice under MCPA includes, among other acts, any false, falsely disparaging, or misleading oral or written statement, visual description, or other representation of any kind which has the capacity, tendency, or effect of deceiving or misleading consumers. The prohibition against engaging in any unfair, abusive, or deceptive trade practice encompasses the offer for or actual sale, lease, rental, loan, or bailment of any consumer goods, consumer realty, or consumer services; the extension of consumer credit; the collection of consumer debt; or the offer for or actual purchase of consumer goods or consumer realty from a consumer by a merchant whose business includes paying off consumer debt in connection with the purchase of any consumer goods or consumer realty from a consumer.

The Consumer Protection Division is responsible for enforcing MCPA and investigating the complaints of aggrieved consumers. The division may attempt to conciliate the matter, issue a cease and desist order, or file a civil action in court. A merchant who violates MCPA is subject to a fine of up to $10,000 for each violation and up to $25,000 for each repetition of the same violation. In addition to any civil penalties that may be imposed, any person who violates MCPA is guilty of a misdemeanor and, on conviction, is subject to a fine of up to $1,000 and/or imprisonment for up to one year.

Small Business Effect: The bill's expansion of MPIPA likely results in additional costs for small businesses that own, license, or maintain the personal information of Maryland residents. Such businesses may incur additional costs to comply with the bill's requirements, particularly those relating to notifying consumers regarding data breaches.
