28. Comments
EHCC is receiving requests for services from Southern Maryland feeding organizations on a regular basis. However, the EHCC warehouse is operating at maximum capacity. Under these conditions, new partners cannot be accepted or fully served resulting in a large service gap in the region. The proposed EHCC Food Distribution Center will be debt-free by the end of the CDBG grant cycle and offer a 43% increase in warehouse space. The increased space and reduced occupancy costs will allow EHCC to accept ten new partners throughout Southern Maryland by 2022, expand services to current partners and ensure that all low-income families have enough healthy food to eat. The following examples demonstrate how the EHCC warehouse food distribution program increases access to food in Southern Maryland. <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>- End Hunger partnered with FEMA and Governor Hogan's Office of Community Initiatives to receive and distribute 13 tractor-trailer loads of emergency food from FEMA's Federal Surplus Donation Program --- the equivalent of 25,000 meals.</li><li>- When Food Lion closed its Calvert stores in 2017, the company donated 267,542 pounds of food to EHCC with the caveat that the food be received in one day. Without EHCC warehouse services the food would have been redirected out of Southern Maryland.</li><li>-Royal Dining Services, of Owings, MD donated 93,720 pounds of food to End Hunger</li><li>-B. K. Miller, Inc. of Clinton, Maryland donated 108,676 pounds of food to End Hunger</li><li>-C&amp;S Wholesale Grocers, of Jessup, Maryland donated 67,239 pounds of food to End Hunger.</li></ul> The proposed increase in occupancy costs combined with limited warehouse space will force EHCC to scale back its operation resulting in a decrease of available food, especially fresh produce and lean meats. Large-scale donations will be rerouted to regions with the capacity to accept and distribute tractor-trailer loads of food. Without the End Hunger warehouse acting as the Maryland Food Bank Southern Maryland Food Distribution Hub, Southern Maryland feeding organizations will have extremely limited access to the low-cost products from Maryland Food Bank. Quite simply, no other feeding organization in Southern Maryland has the expertise and capacity to manage the volume of food needed to satisfy both current and projected demand
