Senate Bill 812 (Senator A. Washington)
Education, Energy, and the Environment

Higher Education - Disciplinary Records - Use in Admissions and Disciplinary Proceedings

This bill generally prohibits an institution of higher education that receives State funds from using an admissions application that contains questions about an applicant’s disciplinary record. However, such an institution may use a third-party admissions application that contains such questions if (1) that third-party admissions application is not used to disqualify an applicant based on the disciplinary record and (2) a notice is posted on the institution’s website stating that a disciplinary record does not disqualify an applicant from admission. Further, such an institution may make inquiries into and consider information about a student’s disciplinary record for discipline related to academic dishonesty. For purposes of the bill, “disciplinary record” is any information relating to the discipline of a student from a school in any state, including a public or private primary or secondary school, a private career school, or a community college or other institution of higher education. The bill takes effect July 1, 2023.

Analysis

Current Law:

Maryland Fair Access to Education Act of 2017

The Maryland Fair Access to Education Act of 2017 (Chapter 2 of 2018) generally prohibits an institution of higher education that receives State funds from using an undergraduate admissions application that contains questions about the criminal history of the applicant. However, an institution may use a third-party admissions application that contains questions about the criminal history of the applicant if the institution (1) does not use the third-party application to disqualify an applicant based on criminal history and (2) posts a notice on its website stating that a criminal history does not disqualify an applicant from admission. A student's criminal history may be inquired into and considered for the purposes of deciding access to campus residency or offering counseling and services. An institution of higher education may develop a process for determining or restricting access to campus residency for a student who has been convicted of (1) a sexual crime under Title 3, Subtitle 3 of the Criminal Law Article; (2) a crime of violence under Title 14 of the Criminal Law Article; or (3) a substantially similar crime in another state. An institution of higher education must develop a process that considers specified issues in denying admission or limiting access to an affected student's campus residency.

State law allows various State licensure boards, including health occupations boards, to prohibit licensure to an individual who is convicted of or pleads guilty or nolo contendere to a felony or to a crime involving moral turpitude or other specified crimes.

Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act

At the federal level, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) of 1974 governs the privacy of student data. FERPA generally prohibits the disclosure by schools that receive federal education funding of personally identifiable information from a student's education record, unless the educational institution has obtained signed and dated written consent from a parent or eligible student or one of FERPA's exceptions applies. An education record includes a range of information about a student.

FERPA's exceptions are not always well understood, which leads to some believing that no information about a student may be disclosed without facing a lawsuit, even in the face of health or safety concerns. However, federal regulations (34 CFR 99.36) specifically address these circumstances so that an institution may disclose personally identifiable information from an education record to appropriate parties, including parents of an eligible student, in connection with an emergency if knowledge of the information is necessary to protect the health or safety of the student or other individuals.

In addition, not all information that comes into the hands of an educator, administrator, or other school staff is an “education record” subject to FERPA restrictions. Two particular sources of information are outside FERPA’s definition of “education record”: (1) information an educator learns through personal observation, peer reports, or social media; and (2) records of school security personnel, which are governed under a specific exception to FERPA. Therefore, this information may be disclosed outside of FERPA.

Additional Comments: The University of Maryland, Baltimore Campus advises that, according to accreditation standards set by the American Bar Association, institutions must only “admit applicants who appear capable of...being admitted to the bar.” All state bars have character and fitness requirements that must be satisfied before a candidate to the bar may be admitted. The character and fitness requirements in most, if not all, states (including Maryland) ask for a candidate’s criminal history and academic disciplinary history. Applicants to law school may not be eligible for admission to the state bar based on these histories. The law school must certify to the state bar that, to the best of its knowledge, each student completing the Juris Doctorate program is eligible to apply for bar entry. Failure to meet accreditation standards could result in a loss of accreditation.

The Maryland State Department of Education advises that a student’s school disciplinary record is protected under FERPA and, thus, would not be disclosed by a local school system for the exception contained in the bill.
