Analysis

Bill Summary: A unit or an agency of the State or political subdivision of the State may conduct persistent aerial surveillance:

- in accordance with a valid search warrant issued by a judge;
- on a location for the purpose of executing an arrest warrant;
- in fresh pursuit of a suspect, as specified;
- to assist in an active search and rescue operation;
- to locate an escaped prisoner;

- if a law enforcement officer reasonably believes that the use of aircraft is necessary to prevent imminent serious bodily harm to an individual; or
- if the U.S. Secretary of Homeland Security determines that credible intelligence indicates that there is a high risk of a terrorist attack by a specific individual or organization and that persistent aerial surveillance is necessary to counter such a risk.

“Persistent aerial surveillance” means the use of aircraft to record video or a concurrent series of images or pictures that when viewed in aggregate depict a person’s actions over time.

Current Law: Maryland currently has no laws limiting the use of aerial surveillance. The Fourth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects individuals from unreasonable searches and seizures by the government and has been interpreted to create a right of privacy. The reasonableness of a governmental search often depends on the reasonableness of the expectation of privacy on the part of the person subject to the search, the location of the search, and the breadth of information gathered.

Generally, U.S. Supreme Court decisions have held a warrantless search of an individual’s home to be unreasonable, with certain clearly delineated exceptions. However, courts have also held that the Fourth Amendment does not protect individuals from searches that take place in “open fields” because it is unreasonable for a person to have an expectation of privacy over activities that take place in such areas. Technological advances have made traditional legal standards that were often location-based difficult to apply, and courts and lawmakers have increasingly had to grapple with the threshold question of whether information gathered through emerging technology constitutes a search at all.

State Fiscal Effect: While not expected to result in a material fiscal impact, the bill results in potentially significant operational impacts for several State agencies with law enforcement units. For example, the Alcohol, Tobacco, and Cannabis Commission advises that the bill has an operational impact on its ability to arrange for the use of drones to aid in investigations related to the transportation and sale of alcohol and tobacco. The Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services similarly advises that the bill affects the ability of the department’s Investigative and Intelligence Division to conduct surveillance to prevent the introduction of contraband to State correctional facilities.
