

Ending Cheap Eviction Lawsuits Will Increase Housing Stability, Fund Legal Aid Services

Position Statement Supporting House Bill 729

Given before the Judiciary Committee

House Bill 729 establishes an eviction surcharge that effectively raises Maryland courts' rock-bottom $15 court filing fee for evictions to the national average of $120. Raising the fee will reduce high-volume eviction dockets, end cheap repeat lawsuits, and establish an eviction surcharge fee that will help fund legal services to ensure that people facing eviction proceedings have access to a lawyer. The Maryland Center on Economic Policy supports House Bill 729, because more evictions following COVID-19 will risk the health of all Marylanders, further jeopardizing the state's economy, and halt pandemic recovery.

Maryland families were already facing housing instability long before the pandemic. In Maryland, an average of 660,000 evictions are filed annually. In Baltimore City, there are more eviction cases filed yearly than there are available rental units, which suggests repeated eviction filings by landlords. Maryland is currently the third cheapest state to file for an eviction with a low cost of $15. Raising the fee to $120 will bring Maryland in line with the current national average for the cost to file for an eviction.

The spread of COVID-19 has resulted in substantial loss of income for many Marylanders, leaving them unable to afford their rent. Preserving housing stability is the most effective method for preventing the spread of the virus, as people must quarantine in their homes. This notion was the driving force for the CDC taking unprecedented action by issuing the national moratorium on evictions. In light of the CDC actions, many Marylanders believed they were protected from being taken to court for eviction and that their landlords would have to apply for rental assistance before they could resort to lawsuits, however this is not the case due to the many loopholes in current renter protections.

In response to the economic crises, Governor Hogan did take some actions early on to protect Marylanders from evictions caused by the pandemic.<sup>1</sup> However, those protections expired in July of last year and eviction filings have since resumed. In Maryland:

- 115,000 eviction cases were filed from July to November of last year
- 36% of Black households are not current on their rent compared to 14% of white households
- Over 2,500 Marylanders were evicted amid the surging public health crises from July to November of last year
- 30% of households earning less than $50,000 are behind in their rent compared to just 10% of those earning $75,000 or more.

Increasing the cost to landlords for entering eviction proceedings will create a greater incentive for landlords to work with tenants on repayment of unpaid rent. The data support the need for this legislation with so many Marylanders currently being behind in their rent.

The COVID-19 crisis has spotlighted the reality that Maryland's current eviction process is by design a race to displace Marylanders. Thanks to a recent report, we know that 99% of renters face eviction without the assistance of a lawyer.<sup>ii</sup> When a family receives an eviction judgment, it is a loss of a home, their possessions, school, community, employment, mental and physical health and the ability to secure a new place to live. Maryland can build back better if we prioritize stability over displacement. For these reasons, the Maryland Center on Economic Policy respectfully requests the Judicial Proceedings Committee to make a favorable report on House Bill 729.

---

Equity Impact Analysis: House Bill 729

Bill Summary

House Bill 729 establishes an eviction surcharge that effectively raises Maryland courts' rock-bottom $15 court fee for evictions to the national average of $120.

Background

Maryland families were already facing housing instability long before the pandemic. In Maryland, in average of 660,000 evictions are filed annually. In Baltimore City, there are more eviction cases files yearly then there are available rental units, which suggests repeated eviction filings by landlords. Maryland is currently the third cheapest state to file for an eviction with a low cost of $15. Raising the fee to $120 will bring Maryland in line with the current national average for the cost to file for an eviction. Moreover, it will also reduce high volume eviction dockets, end cheap repeat lawsuits and establish an eviction surcharge fee that will fund legal services for people facing eviction proceedings. Most importantly, it ensures that any such increase in eviction filing fees are not passed on to the tenant.

Equity Implications

A recent study found that the number of evictions of Black women is 3.9 times (296% more) than the number of evictions of white men.<sup>iii</sup>

Impact

The surcharge will not only bring Maryland in line with the national average, but it will incentive landlords to work with tenants on repayment of unpaid rent. It will also lower Maryland's eviction court dockets, which will reduce rental debt and negative effects on credit and tenant screening.

---

<sup>i</sup> The State of Maryland Emergency Declaration <https://governor.maryland.gov/wp-content/uploads/2020/03/Executive-Order-Temp-Evictions-Prohibiting.pdf>

<sup>ii</sup> Public Justice Center (2019) The Economic Impact of a Right to Council in Baltimore City. <https://bmorerentersunited.org/rtc/stoutreport/>

---

<sup>iii</sup> Thomas, T. (PhD) Baltimore Evictions Study. <https://evictions.study/maryland/report/baltimore.html>