Re: Favorable Report for House Bill 284

Dear Chairman Smith and Members of the Committee:

The trauma (Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACES)) children experience impact every part of the child's life to include their physical health as adults. There have been numerous published medical studies on ACES, the impact on health and what can be done to help reduce these longterm impacts. ACES include child abuse, witnessing domestic violence in the home, witnessing a homicide and more. Reducing trauma is one thing the courts can and should do when it comes to child victims and witnesses. Every time we question a child and make the child relive the trauma it re-traumatizes the child. This legislature and courts all over the country, under the Daubert standard, have recognized the inherent reliability and admissibility of properly conducted forensic interviews of children in child abuse cases (Criminal Procedure 11-304).

"A forensic interview of a child is a developmentally sensitive and legally sound method of gathering factual information regarding allegations of abuse or exposure to violence." "Vj ku'o gy qf 'tgeqi pl gu'vj cv' echildren don't just experience trauma if they are physically or sexually abused. They are traumatized when they are neglected by their caregiver or witness homicides and serious domestic violence in the home.
