

Dear State Official,

As a pressure washing business owner with several years of experience, I am writing to express my concern about the damage caused by unlicensed and untrained contractors to clients' homes and properties. I strongly believe that more industry regulation is necessary to ensure that only licensed and trained professionals are allowed to operate in this field.

Over the years, I have seen firsthand the disastrous consequences of hiring unlicensed and untrained contractors. These individuals often use substandard equipment and cleaning solutions, leading to the destruction of property, including damaged roofs, broken windows, and destroyed landscapes. They also tend to rush the job and take shortcuts, resulting in unsatisfactory results and unhappy clients.

Moreover, the lack of regulation in the pressure washing industry allows anyone to operate as a contractor, regardless of their level of experience or qualifications. This lack of oversight puts both the clients and the industry at risk, as anyone can claim to be an expert in the field without any proof or certification.

Therefore, I strongly urge you to consider implementing licensing requirements and more industry regulation to protect clients and promote professional and ethical practices. Licensing would ensure that only qualified and trained professionals are allowed to operate as contractors, while regulation would establish clear standards for equipment, cleaning solutions, and safety procedures.

I believe that such regulations would benefit the entire industry by establishing trust and credibility with clients, promoting healthy competition, and ultimately protecting clients and properties from harm.

Thank you for considering my testimony and taking action to improve the pressure washing industry.

Sincerely,

Joshua Taylor
