

Finding daycare is always challenging for families. Especially for families who have kids under the age of 2. We moved from a different state and finding the right daycare that is safe and can meet my son's needs was hard. However, we were able to find someone, but we had to wait until my son turned 2 before he could start. Fortunately for us my husband just got out the military and hasn't started working yet. If that was not the case, we would have had to go to another provider or daycare that might not have been up to standard just to get the care we need. We would have not known the quality of care until my son has already started. We still suffer financially because my husband cannot start working until our son has care. Decreasing the age limit from 2 years to 18 months can help so many families like myself get the care we need without having to sacrifice our careers or suffering financial losses.
