My son suffers from autism and obsessive compulsive disorder (OCD) and has 2 counseling sessions a week. One is online and the other I have to drive 90 minutes each way. Take him out of school and take off work. His school is a special needs school and addresses autism but not OCD. If time was allowed during school hours for mental health therapy this would greatly help my son and so many others like him. Plus increase school professionals understanding of OCD and other mental health issues. If mental health therapy could be administered virtually it would save even more time. My son currently meets with one of his therapist online every Sunday and this service is invaluable!
