Testimony Prepared for the Budget and Taxation Committee
And
Education, Energy, and the Environment Committee on
Senate Bill 769
February 26, 2025
Position: Favorable

Mistery Chairmen and members of the Committees, thank you for this opportunity to testify about nutrition and its role in the well-being of the children of our State. I am Lee Hudson, assistant to the bishop for public policy in the Delaware-Maryland Synod, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America. We are a faith community with membership in every region of the State.

Our community's work in policy advocacy began as a commitment to address hunger. It remains one of the principal goals of our advocacy work, nationally and internationally. It was advanced further in 1999 by "Economic Life," (ELCA, re: the moral imperative to seek sufficient, sustainable livelihood for all). We maintain a permanent institutional appeal to address and advocate an end to hunger.

Child hunger is something like a permanent public scandal in the United States. One of the social defects illuminated during the pandemic was a spike in malnourishment among children because of the loss of nutritional resources delivered by the public education system.

According to a Save the Children report, twelve million American children are hungry. Kentucky, Maryland, Oklahoma, and Washington, D.C. report a 22% rate of family hunger: in Maryland, Hispanic and Black families are almost 4 times as likely to face hunger as white families. Kennedy-Krieger reports that 12% of Maryland's children live in poverty, a reliable marker for malnutrition. For all the good work Maryland has done to address poverty via health care expansions, workfare, EITC, etc. these statistics shout that something is being left out.

It's Maryland's children. We must not leave them out. There are social, public health, education, and economic consequences to child hunger. Leave those aside in your consideration of Senate Bill 769. It is cruelty to child malnourishment with profit-loss ratios. Hungry children have no agency over their condition.

Maryland children, and almost certainly the hungry ones, are mandated by law to be public school children. Give them two acceptable meals a day. We understand that establishing a Community Eligibility Provision Expansion Program to provide better nutrition to more Maryland children needing it. Please diminish appalling child hunger statistics, at least some, at least in Maryland, and report Senate Bill 769 favorably.

Thank you for this important hearing.

Lee Hudson
