

The Jillian and Lindsay Wiener Short-Term Rental Fire Safety Act is more than a bill - it is a chance to protect lives and honor two extraordinary young women.

Lindsay Weiner was one of the most special people I have ever met. She had a way of walking into a room and making everyone feel seen, always greeting people with a warm smile. She never judged - she simply saw the good in others. That light and kindness are what this world needs more of.

After Jillian and Lindsay passed, I had the privilege of connecting with the Weiner family and seeing firsthand where that strength and compassion came from. Even in the face of unimaginable tragedy, Elisa was still there, offering comfort to others. That grace speaks volumes about who they are.

Passing this bill means ensuring that no other family has to endure such a preventable loss. Stronger fire safety requirements for short-term rental units are not just policy - they are protection. They are committed to valuing human life above all else.

In Jillian and Lindsay's memory, and for the safety of every family who books a short-term rental, this bill must be passed.

Best,
